PITTSBURGH GAZETTE.
MONDAY MORNING, AUGUST 22, 1853.

An Eccentric Member of Congress.—Hon. Caleb Lyon, who has just returned from a visit to Europe, is a member of Congress elect from the western section of New York, and is said to be talented and exceedingly eccentric. A correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer says:

"We have seen him before now, with a plaid silk cravat, monkey jacket and green and black pants, in a gay ball room, the observed of all observers, perfectly at home in his oddities, and really beloved by all who knew how good a heart is hidden behind his California rig. He devised the seal of the State of California—was Clerk of the Constitutional Convention of that State—has been bearer of despatches to China and Brazil, I believe—came home from California and stumped it for Assembly three years ago—succeeded—when the Senators resigned to defeat the Canal Bill, he too resigned to defeat the Senator from his district—was elected—run as stump candidate for Congress—was elected, of course—can make as telling a speech, or as taking a fugitive poem as almost anybody—and we predict will be the first man asked for by strangers in the gallery of the House of Representatives, after Congress meets."

Going to Plymouth, in the cars on Monday, at one of the stopping places, a man was heard running along the roof of the cars. Mrs. Partington was much alarmed, and turning to old Roger, who sat beside her, asked him the cause of the noise. "That," said the little man, faintly smiling, "appears to be a man heels over head!" A sympathetic remark she made about the misfortunate creature was lost in the noise made by the velocity of the cars.
