Burdette on the Blackberry.

Burlington Hawkeye. The greatest enemy the blackberry has is boys. Five boys from town can eat more green blackberries in a day than would ripen in a week. For many years the great desideratum has been a hardy berry that could resist the premature on slaught of boys from town. It is a great desideratum still. The Schneider, a variety that was invented by an Iowa horticulturist, is the nearest approach to it. It is bred from a perfectly green persimmon crossed with a dogwood tree, and still farther propagated with a hybrid of wormwood bush and wild crabapple. It is not a perfect defense, but there are a very few boys who care to eat more than a quart of them. Nobody else, however, can go past the field where the Schneider is growing, without being attacked by Asiatic cholera and this tends to weaken the partial successs this hardy berry has acheived. Then there is a bug—I do not know the name of it—that crawls over the berries now and then. When you eat a berry that has been glorified by a visit from this bug, you lie down in the briars and pray Heaven to take you home in just about three seconds. And if you live you can wake up in the night, along in the middle of next winter, and shudder as you taste of that berry.

When your blackberries grow too thickly, you will want to thin them out. To this you must kill some of them. This can be done by digging a well where the plant stands; then turn the farm upside down and let it dry out thoroughly for a couple of years, then turn it over, upside down, and start a brickyard on the back of it. This will kill off some of the plants. There may be some shorter and cheaper method of killing blackberry vines than this, but I have never heard of it, and it isn't likely that there is any.

If you want to devote about forty acres of ground to the cultivation of blackberries, plant about three healthy vines in some corner of the field, about the middle of April. Then about the first of May the man who owns the farm on the other side the road will bring civil action against you, and try to collect damages for destruction of his two fields of wheat by a raid of blackberry vines.

It is not known just at what season of the year blackberries ripen. The blackberry has never been known to ripen. If the hucksters and boys should all die in June, it is probable that the berries would ripen some time in July or August. But they have never had a chance to see what they could do at ripening.

Snowden's Contempt.

Washington (Pa.) Review and Examiner

The census enumerators got drunk and behaved in a disorderly manner in Lancaster on the day of the Republican primary elections there. They were arrested and the mayor sent them to jail for thirty days. They were brought befor Judge Patterson on a writ of hebeas corpus. (This is the same judge who disbarred Steinman & Hensel for alleged contempt.) He decided that the commitment was legal-and then discharged them from custody so that they might be able to take the census: They are not taking it , however. With praiseworthy promptitude the census Supervisor, Mr. Snowden, dismissed them. And now we are waiting whether Judge Patterson will rule the supervisor to answer for contempt! Certainly nothing could be better expressive of contempt for the judge's
