AN ADVENTURE IN A RAILROAD CARRIAGE.—After I had taken my seat one morning at Paddington, in an empty carriage, I was joined just as the train was moving off, by a strange looking young man, with remarkably long flowing hair. He was, of course, a little hurried, but he seemed beside to be disturbed and wild, so that I was quite alarmed for fear of his not being right in his mind, nor did his subsequent conduct at all re-assure me. Our train was an express, and he inquired eagerly, at once, which was the first station whereat we were advertised to stop. I consulted my Cradshaw, and furnished him with the desired information. It was Reading. The young man looked at his watch. "Madam," said he, "I have but half an hour between me, and, it may be ruin. Excuse, therefore, my abruptness. You have, I perceive, a pair of scissors in your work-bag.—Oblige me, if you please, by cutting off my hair." "Sir, said I, it is impossible."
"Madame," he urged, and a look of severe determination crossed his features, "I am a desperate man. Beware how you refuse what I ask. Cut my hair off—short, close to the roots—immediately: and there is a newspaper to hold the ambrosial curls." I thought he was mad, of course; and believing that it would be dangerous to thwart him, I cut off all his hair to the last lock. "Now, madam," said he, unlocking a small portmanteau, "you will further oblige me by looking out of the window, as I am about to change my clothes." Of course I did so, and the winder for a very considerable time, and when he observed, "Madame, I need no longer put you to any inconvenience," I did not recognize the young man in the least.
Instead of his former gay costume, he was attired in black, and wore a grey wig and silver spectacles; he looked like a respectable divine of the church of England of about sixty four years of age; to complete that character, he had a volume of sermons in his hand, which—they appeared so to absorb him—might have been his own. "I do not wish to threaten you, young lady," he resumed, "and I think, besides, I can trust your kind face. Will you promise me not to reveal this metamorphosis until your journey's end?" "I will," said I, "most certainly." At Reading the guard and a person in plain clothes looked into our carriage. "You have the ticket," my love, said the young man, blandly, and looking at me as though he were my father.
"Never mind, sir, we don't want them," said the official, as he withdrew his companion "I shall now leave you, Madame," observed my fellow traveller, as soon as the coast was clear, "by your kind and courageous conduct you have saved my life, and perhaps even your own." In another minute he was gone and the train was in motion. Not till the next morning did I learn from the Times newspaper that the gentleman on whom I had operated as hair cutter had committed a heavy forgery to an enormous amount in London a few hours before I met him, and that he had been tracked into an Express train from Paddington, but that—although the telegraph had been put in motion and described him accurately—at Reading, when the train was searched he was nowhere to be found.—Household Words.

THE GROWING WHEAT CROP.—In collecting our statistics of Pork packing, we have been furnished incidentally, with information from all sections of the Western States regarding the extent and present prospects of the growing wheat crop. The quantity of land sown with Wheat in fall was larger than the previous year, the weather during September being especially favorable for it. At the commencement of winter, the growth was more forward than for many years the winter has been quite favorable, in all the States, and the prospect of an abundant crop, was never more favorable, at the close of the month of March. Many express the fear, that the plants are too thick on the ground, and that with favorable growing weather during April and May the growth will be too rapid, producing a weak plant, and inducing rust or "lodging." It seems to be generally conceded that the crop is past the dangers of winter, and that it will do well until about the first of June, when the next crisis of the crop comes.—Cin. Price Cur.

STOCKS OF WHEAT AND CORN IN THE HANDS OF FARMERS.—The information we have received from our correspondent in this and the adjoining States, the last three or four weeks leaves no doubt whatever that the stocks of Wheat and Corn, in the hands of farmers are enormous—The prices current for Wheat, last October, was so far below the estimate set upon it by its owners, that they refused to sell, preferring to hold it over until spring for better pr
