Pittsburgh Gazette,
PUBLISHED DAILY AND WEEKLY BY S. RIDDLE & CO., FIFTH STREET, ADJOYNING SMITHFIELD.

Speech of Hon. John Covode.

MR. COVODE: I object to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, which limits the war steamers to twelve hundred tons burden each, because I consider they are to be used, if used at all, against those of the enemy of twenty-five hundred or three thousand tons burden.—Although I voted for these ten steamers to-day, and voted for the four for the lakes, I was not influenced to do so because I had the remotest idea that there is any probability of a war, but because our naval force is inefficient, and will be so long as we rely upon our vessels. I voted for them that we might have a more efficient Navy.

Mr. Chairman, I stated some days ago that we were far behind the English in the strength of our naval force. I have been at some pains to look at the comparative naval power of the several nations of the world, and here are the facts I have collected: England had, at the close of the Crimean war, about five hundred war steamers. She had two years ago ninety-one lines of ocean mail steamers running direct from England to foreign ports, employing about four hundred steamers; and she had twenty-five lines running between foreign ports in connexion with them, employing one hundred and five steamers; making five hundred and five ocean mail steamers which receive large sums direct from the government as an inducement for their several companies to establish and run them.—These are all subject to the orders of the government whenever the exigencies of war render it necessary for her to use them, either as war steamers or transport vessels. Thus it will be seen that she has a war force at her command of about one thousand steamers, besides nearly the same number of mercantile steamers, making a grand total of nearly two thousand ocean steamers. Sir, she has taken already a large share of our carrying trade, and nearly the whole of the most valuable portion of it. There are now forty-four English, five Belgian, five French, and four Hamburg steamers running in the American trade, while there are but eight American, fifty-eight to eight. No wonder that seventy hundreths of our commerce was, last year, in the hands of foreigners; and they will soon have a monopoly of it if we go on much longer in the blundering way we have been going, under the operation of the tariff of 1857.

France, though not a first class commercial Power, has gone far ahead of us in building ocean steamers. She has one hundred and thirty war steamers on the Mediterranean, Levant, Black, North, and Baltic seas.

Austria, not a commercial nation at all, has one hundred and ten steamers on those seas; and Russia has over one hundred, and is constantly increasing her steam power.

The United States has only twenty, eight of which only carry from one to six guns: some of them not fit to be sent outside of a harbor.

We have a few line-of-battle ships, old sailing vessels; but of what use would they be to cope with the modern war steamers? Besides, it will be found, I presume, upon their being surveyed, as they have been ordered to be, that it will cost more to repair them than they will be worth when repaired. I am, therefore, in favor, Mr. Chairman, of building steamers, so that we may be able to meet our enemies, who we have any, on a footing of equality, and not compel our brave officers and men to fight at large odds.—Just as well might we continue to arm our soldiers with the old-fashioned musket and expect them to whip an equal number armed with Minnie rifles and improved breech-loading arms.

Mr. Chairman, advocating the building of war steamers, I do not wish to be understood as countenancing the idea that we are at all in danger of having a war with England at this time or at any other time near at hand; but for the sake of having a Navy that can render efficient protection to our commerce in distant seas, and command the respect of those nations which respect only those that exhibit ample ability to protect their own flag, and all who are entitled to protection under it.

Sir, England is governed by wise and sagacious statesmen, and no people in the world know better than the English upon which side their bread is buttered. She and her people are too wise and sagacious to run into a war with her best customer, unless she thinks, from what she may have profitably employed, are dominant party have been fixing our tariff for her special benefit ever since they repealed the Whig tariff of 1842. Does she not know that under present tariff laws, foreign nations have almost a monopoly of manufacturing the goods our people wear and use, and that she comes in for the lion's share. It would be the height of folly in her to make war upon us, or to give us cause to make war upon her, so long as the party in power renders her such inestimable services at the expense of our own manufacturers, laborers and merchants. Why, sir, it would be killing the goose that laid for her owner a golden egg daily. No, no, sir; we need have no apprehensions of a war, nor need we prepare the hearts of the people for war. The only war we are to have is a continuance of the war we have had since 1846, upon American industry and free manufacture. That is a cruel, unnatural, relentless war, it kills by starving, and its victims are powerless.

Sir, the Democratic party may well afford to sound the trumpet of war in these Halls. It calls no one to battle, and alarms none but old women and nervous invalids. We have, in years gone by, heard the daily cry in the Senate from a venerable, a very venerable old Senator, that "war was inevitable;" and one might suppose it to be so now, but it is not. The free trade which England enjoys with us, the monopoly, or what amounts almost to a monopoly, which she now possesses of transporting our cotton to her own shores, of manufacturing it for us, and then of transporting the goods made of it back to us, she appreciates too highly to throw them away thoughtlessly. And, again, she knows well the importance to her of having the privilege of putting her own instead of home valuations on the goods she sends us, by which means she evades the payment of a large portion of the duties that ought to be paid, and drives American importers out of business in our own cities.

England knows well that [illegible] non-intercourse with us, would build up our manufacturers on a solid foundation, and thus take from them their most profitable market, and their largest, for many years to come. Our weak point is California; and, until we get a railroad across the country, it would not only be very expensive to protect our Pacific coasts, but with our small Navy it would be absolutely impossible, against any powerful nation; but so long as we dig gold for England, so long as we are simply their miners, and all we get goes directly into her lap: we taking finery and gewgaws, and goods which we ought to manufacture for ourselves, in payment for this gold; so long as the labor of her women and children can pay for the productions of our mines: why should she desire to disturb the present state of things, so profitable to her?

No, Mr. Chairman, you need not alarm yourself or the country about a war with England. Instead of that it would be well for us to turn our attention to the state of our finances, our general trade, and manufactures; and see if anything can be done to benefit the country.

This Administration found some twenty millions in the Treasury; it has been in power a little more than a year, and what is the condition of the Treasury now? Bankrupt. And, although we have been digging gold at the rate of more than four and a half millions a year, still the government has been obliged to resort to what the party used to call "the rag-money currency," to the issuance of Treasury notes, formerly classically denominated "Treasury shinplasters." What a beautiful state of things! What statesmanship it proves the President and his Administration to possess! What wisdom, sagacity, patriotism! And yet, bankrupt as the Government is, it obstinately pursues a policy calculated not only to impoverish it still more, and compel the Secretary of the Treasury to heap debt upon debt, by borrowing, but it is also calculated to depress American enterprise, cripple American industry, destroy American manufactures, and to reduce to the lowest price American produce. Such folly and madness would astonish us if we were not accustomed to and familiar with it.

Mr. Chairman, I have a word to say on the war policy of the present Administration. It has displayed the same wisdom and foresight in regard to this as in regard to its financial policy. For some reason or other, a war upon Utah was deemed expedient. It was necessary to chastise the Mormons for Brigham Young's insolent and insane ravings. The war was commenced; the Army, at an immense expense of suffering, was marched thousands of miles through the wilderness, millions of dollars had been expended in recruiting and provisioning it for the campaign; and when, after months of toil in crossing the mountains, forcing its way through valleys obstructed by snow, and in struggles with an inhospitable climate, it had at length arrived within striking distance of the enemy, peace commissioners were
