—Random Irk: It isn't often that we find fault with other newspapers, because we realize that we live in a glass house ourselves, but we feel that this thing of calling the new Bellefonte-State College Highway the "Benner Turnpike," has gone far enough. In the first place the road is not a turnpike, for no tolls will be charged. In the second place it seems that the years of effort and strife Bellefonte and State College residents went through to get the road shouldn't be cancelled by naming the road "Benner," who, may he rest in peace, had nothing whatever to do with getting the road constructed. In the third place you can't conveniently fit the term "Benner Turnpike" in a headline. Its too long. And the thing is really serious. A headline the other day read "Bellefonte to Clear Turnpike Street of Cars." To so mislabel good old Water Street is enough to make Bellefonte's founding fathers turn over in their graves! We're sorry we don't have a fitting substitute name for the road, for we like to be constructive. But until someone thinks of one which places proper dignity and proper credit upon the 9-mile highway Bellefonte and State College residents sweated for years to get, we're going to call it the Bellefonte-State College Highway. And try to fit that into a headline!

—Elimination of radio noise is simply a matter of giving someone the authority to hunt sources of noise and to direct methods for keeping the interference from going into the air, Tuesday afternoon this writer stopped in the Undine Fire Company reading room for a few minutes. The radio was tuned to a broadcast of a baseball game. At frequent intervals there would be several clicks followed by the noise of a running motor which all but drowned out the program. The motor would run for a few seconds, then stop. We left the Undine house and a few moments later dropped in at a nearby shop. Idly watching a workman at his chores we noticed that at frequent intervals he turned on an electrical tool which he ran for a few seconds before turning it off. The motor was controlled by a rheostat, and it became apparent at once that the source of the interference at the Undine House had been located. The clicks before the motor started were caused as the rheostat lever moved over the contacts. We'd venture to say that the workman hasn't the slightest idea that every time he turns on his motor he spoils programs on radios in a radius of nearly a block on all sides. We further predict that if someone told him about the interference he'd gladly do whatever is necessary to stop it, for he is not only a good citizen, but a fireman and a firm friend of firemen. Bellefonte Borough recently purchased a machine for locating sources of radio interference, and it has an ordinance compelling residents to correct conditions which cause interference, but as far as we know both the machine and the ordinance are gathering dust on some musty borough shelf.
