Now, 1 was under the impression was a full and complete defiance given, to meet them at any time, for the discussion of any or all of the general questions involved in the present campaign. But, to my surprise, there was a limited specification of subject, which is purely of an apostate nature, and which I shall advert to presently. He has challenged "the slavery-extension party."-What party he had reference to, I could not have conceived from a mere reading of the 'Star," without some additional assurance, which had been advarced by men of his political stamp-for the Democratic party claim to occupy the same national stand upon the great juestion of "Slavery," which the patriots lay and Webster have acknowledged and endorsed in the constitution of our country. We do and must believe, both from reason and evdence, that he is a member of the real "slaverv-extension party"-since their unprincioled, unwise and unpatriotic abolition policy s more detrimental to the abolition of slavery, than the spreading of it through several Kansas territories. But we are compelled to exercise brevity-therefore we hasten to the

The Democracy are said to be challenged !-and good heavens, upon what ground? The challenge says-upon "the constitutionality &c. of the Kansas code of laws." What a political humbug! We are not accountable for the laws that the people of that soil choose them. The Democracy of both the North and South claim "popular sovereighty" for Kansas, asking no more right to make laws for the same, than Virginia or Maryland dare have to legislate for Pennsylvania. Let her frame her own laws as all territories are allowed to do, after having the requisite number of inhabitants to be classified a State,-and then if those laws are unconsiltutional, she cannot be admitted-she must and will be rejected a place in the confederacy. This is the national and constitutional policy; this is the course marked out by all the wisdom of past legislation, and this is the real course of the Democracy. In short, the challenge is emphatically a shallow and unjust one, and as every appearance of being totally destiture of a manly and dignified courage. As unjust limitation is an evidence of infirmity, we regret the braygadorio a la opposition. So that the Democracy may evince a more onorable feeling and principle, I hereby challenge any of the opposition, particularly the author of the communication in the last 'Star," to meet me upon equal terms at any time, for a public discussion of any or all of the general principles involved in the present campaign. And though youth and inexperience is my portion, I will claim the full discussion of principles, laying aside the consideration of age.
