LITTLE GIFFEN.

The following poem written by Dr. F. O. Ticknor, of Columbus, Ga., is taken from the periodical The Land we Love:

Out of the focal and foremost fire—
Out of the hospital walls, as dire:
Smitten of grape-shot and gangrene,
(Eighteenth battle, and he sixteen:)
Specimen such of a President's war—
Lifted Giffen of Tennessee!

"We take him and welcome!" the surgeon said,
"Much your Doctor can help the dead!"
And so we took him, and brought him where
The balm was sweet on the Summer air;
And we laid him down on a wholesome bed,
Utter Lazarus, heel to head!

Weary war with the baited breath,
Skeleton boy against skeleton death;
Months of torture, how many such!
Weary weeks of the stick and crutch!
Still a glint in the steel-blue eye
Spoke of a spirit that wouldn't die!

And didn't day, more! in death's despite
The crippled skeleton learned to write!
"Dear Mother," at first, of course, and then
"Dear Captain"—inquiring about the "men."
Captain's answer—"Of eighty and five,
Giffen and I are left alive!"

Johnston's pressed at the front they say!
Little Giffen was up and away!
A tear, his first, as he bade good-by,
Dimmed the glint of his steel-blue eye:
"I'll write, if spared!" there was news of fight,
But none of Giffen, he did not write!

I sometimes fancy that when I'm king
And my gallant courtiers form a ring,
And each so thoughtless of power and pelf
And each so loyal to all but self,
I'd give the best, on his bended knee—
Yea, barter the whole—for the Loyal
Of Little Giffen of Tennessee!

—A Paris correspondent writes: "What would you say were I to tell you we have in a village near Paris, a woman who has a daughter twenty years older than she is and a grand-daughter twelve months older than she is? I will tell you how it came to pass: She is 19 years old. She is the second wife of a man who is 65, who had by his first spouse a daughter now 40, a wife and the mother of a young girl in her 20th year."

—The London Star ascribes to Longfellow popularity among the English people, who are much more familiar with the productions of the American poet than with the noblest passages of Woodsworth or Southey. "If we come to living poets," the Star says, "we doubt very much whether Tennyson, with all his popularity, can count as many English readers as Longfellow can; and to bring Browning into the comparison would be idle, for the ordinary English public knows simply nothing of Robert Browning; perhaps so great a poet was never, since the introduction of printing, so little known among his own countrymen. Poll the whole population of England to-morrow on the question, and it would probably be found that Longfellow's name, in mere popularity, leads all the rest."

The Fourth in the Ohio Penitentiary.—One of the most interesting features of the exercises was the presentation of pardons to Reuben Johnson, convicted of murder eighteen years ago, and sentenced for life; James Adams, sent thirteen years ago, convicted of murder and also sentenced for life, and Daniel Gray, sent for burglary in 1864, for seven years. The pardons were granted simply on account of the good conduct of the prisoners while in the prison, neither of them having broken any rules of the institution since their imprisonment.

When the Rev. Isaac Cook announced that he held in his hand pardons for three convicts in the room, a general anxiety was manifested among the prisoners, and it was easy to see that their feelings were worked to the highest pitch. When the names of the favored ones were called, it was exceedingly painful to watch the faces of the unlucky ones. Some scowled, some sighed, and many wept like children. The three favored ones took their places in front of the pulpit, with happy faces, and were comparatively calm until the pardons were placed in their hands, when their countenances failed them, and they wept plentifully. The effect upon the other prisoners and the large number of spectators was powerful, young and old were in tears. It is the intention of the Directors to make these pardons act as an incentive to induce the other prisoners to conform to the rules of the institution, and from time to time recommend the most obedient to Executive clemency.

THERE is a suggestion which will help many persons to appreciate the ridiculousness of many of the so-called Woman's Rights. It is by the "Old Bachelor" of Harper's Bazar, who manages to say a good many very sensible things in a very quiet, unaffected way. Read:

"It seemed to me that women might especially succeed as wood engravers, so I went to one of the most experienced and successful engravers in the city, and consulted with him.

"Don't you see the difficulty?" he asked, with great kindness and interest.

"No," said I; "you must instruct me."

"Well," answered he, "I have employed women here very often, and I wish I could feel more encouraged. But, the truth is, that when a young man comes to me and begins his work, he feels that it is his life's business, how to cut his future out of the little blocks before him. Wife, family, home, happiness, are all to be carved by his hands, and he settles steadily and earnestly to his labor, determined to master it, and with every incitement spurring him on. He cannot marry until he knows his trade. It is exactly the other way with the girl. She may be as poor as the youth, and wholly dependent upon her labor for her living. But she feels that she will probably be married by-and-by, and then she must give up wood engraving. So she goes on listlessly; she has no ambition to excel; she does not feel that her happiness depends upon it. She will marry, and then her husband's wages will support her. "She may not say so," said the engraver, "but she thinks so, and it spoils her work."

NEW YORK dispatches say: Hancock has arrival in General W. B. Franklin, now superintendent of Colt's gun factory at Hartford, formerly in the army, a York county (Pa.) man, and until the rebellion rather an old line Whig. Early dissatisfied with the service, he finally became a strong Democrat, and is now one of the reserve corps of candidates. Hendricks' delegates are all for Pendleton, and Vallandigham is on the ground ready to support him if nominated. Hancock is a good deal damaged by the fear lest he would be largely under Grant's influence if elected, and that the General-in-Chief would have too much influence over his military subordinate.

At the head of the Pennsylvania delegation sat Heister Clymer, a man of strong build, of great mental power, and possessing a strength of will truly astonishing when one considers the bitter disappointments to which he has been subjected in his short life of 43 years. He always dresses neatly, is a quiet gentlemanly speaker, is fluent and graceful, and, in knowledge of Parliamentary usages, in quickness to seize a point, whether of logic or strategy, has no superior in the Convention.

PENNSYLVANIA has at last, after much courting, watching and praying, found a candidate in the person of Governor Packer, who is to be brought forward and pressed. If he be dropped, Hancock is to have a complimentary vote, which is of course fatal to Hancock's hopes as a candidate—his only chance being the firm, united and persistent support of his own State. Both these votes amount to nothing, and the delegation knows it, yet Hancock's friends believe the West and Pennsylvania delegates, with their constituents, are earnest for Pendleton.
