Agricultural.

How to Make True Farmers.

There is an old story which runs somewhat thus: A well to do farmer and his wife were discussing the future of their sons. "What shall we make out of them?" anxiously inquir the mother. "Well," replied the old man, "as Jim is cute and tricky, I think we had better make a lawyer of him; John is more steady, and seems to be cut out for a preacher; Tom will make a doctor; but as to Ben, he is the fool of the family, so I think we will keep him at home and make a farmer of him." This, it appears, was perfectly satisfactory to the old lady.

Ridiculous as the story is, there is a good deal of truth in it. There are thousands of farmers in the world who entertain precisely the same opinions as those expressed by the old man in the story. With them, farming is neither more nor less than coarse drudgery, and yet there is no human pursuit so intimately connected with every department of science. It is this erroneous and most pernicious impression which has degraded agricultural pursuits in the estimation of so many, and has driven thousands of intelligent and promising young men from their homes in the country to the cities, and to ruin. When will farmers rise to the true dignity of their calling? A boy is apprenticed for years, to enable him to acquire sufficient skill to make a coat, a shoe, or a hat, but farmers are supposed to be ready made. You scarce meet a man, whatever his early education may have been, who does not feel himself perfectly competent to manage a farm. It takes years of preparatory study to fit a young man for what are termed the learned professions—a lawyer, a clergyman, or a physician; but anything in the shape of a human being, who has sufficient physical strength to enable him to hold a plow, wield a scythe, or harness a horse, is considered enough for a farmer. Such are the men who are too frequently selected to make "the principles and discoveries of some of the most profound and complex of human sciences, bear upon the diversified and multitudious practices of agriculture."

Of course this does not apply to all farmers. There are, fortunately, among the cultivators of the soil, a very large number of most sensible and intelligent men—men who would be an honor to any profession. Our remarks apply to the too generally prevalent opinion that farming requires only broad shoulders and strong arms.

Thanks to the teachings of agricultural journals, agricultural and horticultural societies, and to the influence of valuable agricultural books, this error is being rapidly dissipated. The tillers of the earth are beginning to estimate as they should, the immensely important position which is held by agriculture in its relation to all other human pursuits.

Agricultural teaching is beginning to assume its proper place in our institutions of learning; farmers are awakening to the fact that an intelligent mind is a far better director of a strong arm than a mind upon which the light of education has not shed its beneficent rays. They are beginning to realize the importance of familiarizing themselves with the science of agriculture, as well as with the mere art—with the principles which underlie it, as fully as with the practice. These are encouraging truths. Let the good word be pressed vigorously on. Farmers, do not grudge the outlay required to store the minds of your children with valuable agricultural information. Send them to schools where they will have the opportunities for acquiring this knowledge. Supply them plentifully with the best agricultural and horticultural journals. Make it a point to have on the shelves of your library, as many of the standard authors on Agricultural Chemistry, Manures, Horticulture, Floriculture, Cattle, Horses, Fowls, &c., as your means will allow.

Do this, and though you may be able to give your sons nothing more, you will fit them for intelligent farmers and useful citizens.

GREASING WAGONS.—But few people are aware that they do wagons and carriages more injury by greasing too plentifully than in any other way. A well made wheel will endure common wear from ten to twenty-five years, if care is taken to use the right kind and proper amount of grease; but if this is not attended to, they will be used up in five or six years. Lard should never be used on a wagon, for it will penetrate the hub and work its way out around the tenons of the spokes, and spoil the wheel.—Tallow is the best lubricator for wood axletrees, and castor oil for iron.

Just enough grease should be applied to the spindle of the wagon to give it a light coating; this is better than more, for the surplus put on will work out at the ends, and be forced by the shoulder-bands and nut-washers into the hub around the outside of the boxes.

To oil an axletree, first wipe the spindle clean with a cloth wet with spirits of turpentine, and then apply a few drops of castor oil near the shoulder and end. One teaspoonful is sufficient for the whole.—Ohio Farmer.

LIME DUST FOR PLUM TREES.—It is said that pulverized, unleached lime shaken over plum trees, from the time when the fruit has "set" until after the curculio suspends operations, will insure a good crop of fruit. The operations should be performed when the dew is on, or the good effects will be lost.

SWINE.—Give brood sows good plain feed, not too fattening. If they have made their growth, (and old sows are the best breeders), they do best on really poor feed. They will even winter well on clover hay, with a few nubbing now and then, if they have good warm pens and plenty of litter.

IN Greenland the young people who woo each other give ten pounds of tallow every day to prove their devotion.—S-candlesons
