Agricultural.

What Soils Should be Drained.

Some contend that all lands will pay the outlay on such labor and material. If all lands will do it, then it must be obvious that some lands will pay a very large interest on such investment. What effect can draining have on lands where the underlying earth is so closely compressed that water will stand in the trench until evaporation takes place? Such drains might tap the springs, and if the soil has been deepened to a proper depth, the whole land would be pretty well freed of standing water, provided the ditches were cut pretty near together. Deepening the soil must go along with draining, in order to derive the greatest advantage from the operation.

One great object of this is to distribute the nutritious matter in the surface to such depth as will lead the roots of the growing crop to take a generous hold, and so contract the influence of wet and drouth.

The mechanical condition of such soil renders it in a great measure self-fertilizing, the open and porous state of the soil being thus enabled to freely admit the atmospheric nutriment which is carried down in rains and dews. All surface water passes quickly down into the drains, leaving the ground ready to plow or hoe after a storm of any length. Lands that now forbid plowing till past the season for planting, will be advanced full three weeks, so that potatoes and grain may be put in before hurrying business comes on.

The equalization of heat through the whole depth of the soil, is secured by the ability of air to circulate through the pores. The crust which takes and forms on many lands after wet weather, and which is so impervious to vegetation, will never be found on such improved land. All plants throw off poisonous matter from their roots, which remains to blight and kill the roots, unless this leeching process removes it beyond their reach. Most soils are supplied with a certain proportion of vegetable matter, which the action of water and oxygen will gradually decompose for the nourishment of growing plants. No soil that is contained in lumpy earth can ever be valuable until dissolved or pulverized to powder, and undrained land seldom admits of this process.

The spring is earlier and the autumn frost is later on all lands put into this mechanical condition, because the earth is not chilled by evaporation; the sun's rays absorbed, and the superior warmth dissipates the cold of the night air.

Any land on which water stands after a rain; such as is long wet in spring; such as is heavy to work at any season; such as does not pulverize readily in working, ought to be drained.— Country Gentleman.

Deep Plowing.

We are zealous advocates of deep tillage. I believe in putting on a heavy double, and sometimes treble team, and thrusting in the plow beam deep even when the implement is constructed with direct reference to thorough pulverization, to the depth of 30 or 40 inches, provided that soil is a character to require such deep tillage. I say to one man, put your plow in beam deep; and turn up a new soil that will yield a more bountiful crop than was ever before seen on that land. But to another farmer I say, do not plow that land at all.—It would be ruinous. There are thousands of acres of excellent land in New Jersey and other States, that should never be disturbed with either the trench plow or the subsoil plow. I have a small farm, which I am now cultivating, that I would not have plowed with either of the above implements for half the value of the land, because deep tillage would operate most disastrously on the productiveness of the soil. I am aware that these suggestions will operate like bomb shell among the advocates of deep plowing. But allow me to explain this apparent duplicity by stating when to plow deep, when not to plow deep, and how to plow deep. The productiveness of some of the finest farms in Central New York received a death-blow for half a dozen successive years, simply by being plowed deep in a wrong manner, or with an implement that did not pulverize the soil according to the requirements of that peculiar geological formation of the soil and the subsoil. The peculiar manner of plowing certain soils deep makes all the difference imaginable in their productiveness. On the contrary, you may plow other soils with the trench plow, with a Michigan sod and subsoil plow, with a surface soil plow, followed by a subsoiler, and the more and deeper you plow the land the more bountiful will be the crops. We will take, if you please, "the deep tillers" of Dr. Grant's patterns, that were before the Club a week ago, and which are constructed to run from 20 to 30 inches deep, bringing up the earth from two or more feet below the surface. The geological formation of the earth's surface, in that particular locality is such that the deeper the plow is driven, and the more thorough the pulverization of the soil is, the heavier the crops will be. We all understand that; and our views all coincide most perfectly. All we need on such land is deep plowing and to return a fair equivalent to the soil for the crops that have been removed, and seed-time and plentiful harvest will never cease.—S. Edwards Todd.

LOOK TO YOUR CELLARS.—Now is the time to clean up the celars, as it is a work that should not be left until warm weather is upon us. By that time any vegetable matter left remaining will decompose and produce an atmosphere most deleterious to health. The meat stands should be emitted upon the asparagus beds or manure heap, and must not be thrown anywhere else, as the brine will kill even trees as thick as an arm if applied in large quantities. The cellar should then be thoroughly whitewashed and burnished up nice enough to dine in it. A filthy cellar is an abomination that no housekeeper who has any claim to tidiness will alow it to remain an hour longer than can be helped. The health of the entire family may be endangered by it, and we have no doubt that in many instances fevers have resulted from unwarantable neglect in this matter.—Germantown Telegraph.

Two fine cows were killed in Belmont county, Ind., by drinking brine in which meat had been packed, and which had been carelessly left in a farmer's yard.

A RECENT New Orleans suicide left the following written explanation: "I have seen enough of this world, and am curious to know what there is in the other one."

NO MORE MONOPOLIES!

GRAND OPENING CAMPAIGN

FOR THE

SPRING AND SUMMER OF 1868!

AT THE CELEBRATED

CLOTHING ESTABLISHMENT

OF

ALEX. SOLOMON & CO.

No. 123, Main Street,

TOWANDA, PENN'A.

A new era has dawned upon Towanda and Bradford County. No more monopolies in the Clothing Trade. Down with High Prices.—Goods will hereafter be sold in Towanda at at smaller profit than ever before. The great ambition of the undersigned is to sell goods at a smaller profit than any other firm in the county and to be regarded as the sure friends of the public. We shall, therefore, make it our study to see how cheap we can sell to all.

Our store will continue to be the GREAT REGULATOR OF PRICES of Clothing and Gents Furnishing Goods in Towanda and Bradford county, and all will consult their interest by giving us a call and getting posted on prices before making purchases. Customers will remember that we mean every word we put on paper in regard to goods and prices.

Come one, come all, and buy goods cheap! Remember the number 123, Main street.
