Setting Cabbage Plants.

(For the Reporter.)

A very common and erroneous opinion is prevalent, that Cabbage Plants will not succeed if set during dry weather; consequently, very many persons choose wet weather as the proper time for setting them; even in heavy or clayey soils. Heavy soils, if worked at such times, will bake or harden, and the consequence is, that the plants do poorly. Sandy or very light soils may be stirred even if quite moist without much injury; but it is not desirable to do it even on such soils in a very wet time. It would be better to choose a very dry time in which to set Cabbage plants, if properly done, than in a very wet time.

If you follow the following directions, you can hardly fail to succeed in raising good cabbages. Have your ground well manured, and in good tilth, by plowing or spading deep in dry weather. Set your plants as directed at any time—except in a very wet time—even in the middle of a hot day, though the evening on such days is to be preferred.

Have your plants in good condition; if they have wilted some, put into water till freshened up. Have them dripping wet at time of setting, and wipe the roots of each plant back and forth lightly once into a basin of dry fine ground plaster, or, the finest and driest road dust you can get, and set at once; firm the earth about the plants. They may be set into the ground to the first leaf above the seed leaf. If a dibble is used to make holes with, it should be run down beside the plant, so as to press the earth against the entire roots.—It is a good plan, in a very hot and dry time, to fill the holes with barn-yard manure water and let it soak away before setting the plants; and then set as before stated. Be careful to cover all wet earth upon the surface with fine dry earth. Give good cultivation.

VARIETIES.—The large late Drum heads should be set before July; or, say by 15th to 25th of June. Flat Dutch, Winningstadt, and Improved Brunswick may be set later. I expect to set the Improved Brunswick as late as the 10th to 15th of July—after early peas. R. M. W.

Keeping Fowls in Orchards.

The public has yet to learn the full advantage of keeping poultry. Few seem to appreciate what they may do among trees in an orchard. Let any one try them in an orchard of a quarter of an acre, where they may be kept by a picket fence four or five feet high, putting in say one hundred and twenty-five fowls, and observe the result. He will avoid the annoyance in the garden, of which so many complain, while they will work among the trees, doing just what is needed, keeping the ground well cultivated, and destroying everything that can injure the fruit trees in the shape of bugs, worms or other insects, and lay a large number of eggs, which are a cash article, to say nothing of the chickens, which pay well for raising at the present time.

I have tried it and know it is so.—I have about 100 fowls, which have worked admirably among my trees, keeping the ground in good condition, keeping off the insects and promoting the growth of the orchard. I am satisfied that we have yet to learn the full benefits which may be derived from the proper arrangement of fowls, and it is quite possible that the method I have suggested may offer the best way of getting our apple orchards into bearing condition again.—Cor Northern Farmer.

Stay on the Farm.

The cities and villages are already overcrowded, and every kind of business languishes more than the cultivation of the earth. In the cities the labor market is over stocked, and one can get any desired number of hands for any conceivable job. Clerks from the country have usually to serve two or three years before they can get living wages. The city throngs with unemployed men and women, waiting for something to turn up. Those who find employment have no security for permanence. Mechanics lose their places and have to lie idle for weeks and months together. All the products of skill and labor are relatively cheaper than provisions and breadstuffs. The great material want of the nation is cheaper meats, grain and vegetables. We have merchants, mechanics and middlemen enough, but far too few farmers. The best cultivated State abounds in uncultivated lands. Even in the vicinity of our large towns and cities, cheap lands abound, and splendid chances for enterprising young men to win homes and fortunes. Once settled upon his own acres, the farmer has constant, profitable occupation before him. No where is unskilled labor so sure of sustenance; nowhere will intelligent industry so surely win a happy home and competence. In the country one never need to lack labor, and labor brings there the necessaries and comforts of life.—American Agriculturist.

HOW TO DESERVE SUCCESS.—The thing for every young man to strive for, if he be ambitious of pecuniary success in this world, is a speciality in his business. No matter what trade or profession he may chose, let him adopt some part of it in which to render himself famous. He may then render himself necessary to those who may employ his services, and thus receive his own price for that which he does particularly well.—Without this special superiority he comes into competition with the great mediocracy, and must expect a mediocre compensation in return. The pleasant eminence of excellence however, is not to be gained by wishing merely. It requires good hard work and plenty of it. The world does not pay people for being idle, nor for that which is idly done. There is labor to be done after they are learned and the beginner should never flinch from it, for it is only by his own exertions that he can attain the speciality that is to bring him future honors, and future gold.
