Agricultural.

Eight Reasons for Planting an Orchard

1. Dr. Dwight used to remark to his pupils at Yale, that the raising of fruit was the cheapest and pleasantest way of entertaining one's friends. We have creatures of society and it is very important object to make the social board attractive to all who honor us with their friendship. A dish of well grown apples is always wholesome and acceptable.

2. An orchard is an ornament to the farm beautiful in its spring blossoms, its summer drapery of green, and its autumn burden of yellow and ruddy fruit. No farm is complete without its acres of orchard.

3. The cultivation of this fruit is a very pleasant occupation and has had an important influence upon the mind and heart of the cultivator. It requires higher intelligence than the growing of the annual crops. It fosters forecast and hopefulness, and tends to have a cheerful temper.

4. It makes home attractive—children are universally fond of fruit, and the home where this luxury is always enjoyed, will be more loved on that account. It will be in pleasant contrast with many homes around them.

5. It will tend to guard children against vice and crime. So strong is the desire for fruit, that they may steal it if it be not provided for them at home. And the boy that gives up plundering his neighbor's fruit yard is very likely to steal more valuable things when a man.

6. It is a very sure investment. An apple tree, if well planted, is about as hardy as an oak, and sure to bear fruit according to the labor bestowed upon it. When houses burn up, and banks fail, and railroad stocks depreciate the orchard will yield dividends.

7. It is not only a sure investment for yours, if but for your children. Next to real estate it their inheritance is likely to be so permanently valuable. An orchard in good soil will bear fruit for a hundred years.

8. It is a perpetual incitement to thanksgiving to the bountiful Creator. It yields its burden of precious fruit year after year, giving large returns for the labors of the husbandman, and calling him to behold the munificence and goodness of Providence. It is a fruitfully plant that long deferred orchard, and while you are about it, plant a marketable fruit.

Horse and Family Use.—The most of you can't keep a few hens for eggs, is to keep a few hens for laying, and a few of the Black Spanish or some other laying kind for the sum total of eggs each as is necessary for family use. Keep an old mother hen to do the brooding. The hen is a quiet, quietly domestic, like an American horse; and, like him she is quite accustomed to have a member of the family take her eggs of each kind, and put them in a safe place. The Brahmas are large quarters, and it may be that they are pretty cold. It may not greatly affect their laying, and anyhow a few hens it will pay to keep their roosters. But not so. Hens do better with a mate of this kind, and the stately and beauty of the black crooks are certainly worth their cost, for a fine and handsome fowl is not to be left on the dung hill.

Some of the two breeds will do to fill the table, through the Asiatic probably the best. So their eggs are not the largest kind, and are rich, and of good eggs.

We do not like this mixing of breeds, and this bothering about breeding. Keep the nonsectors for sweepers, and the orientals for winter. Treat well, without any special regard. Give enough to eat and drink, regularly, dust of some kind for dust bath and to wallow in, and plenty of light; a hen loves the light and will do better where it is bright.

Disposed of your pullets at a year old they will then have laid, if they have been properly (generously) fed up six months. It seems a pity for them, at least for many of them. Then the flesh is good, if not so good. Thus keep your stock young and vigorous, which you will find if you have a relish for the thing. If you have not the relish, do not trouble yourself with hens.

The Horseman.—The horseman should be one of the most patient men in the world. His temper should always be under perfect control. Blind passion should never get in the agency—if it does, the poor horse will suffer. But the horseman should not only be a patient man—he should be a kind and good man. He should not like to inflict any unnecessary pain or punishment—his heart should be in the kind for that—for it is by the kindness, after all, that the horse could be trained. His education is to be proceed precisely as a child—for a child has a great advantage over the horse, for it can understand language, and the poor horse cannot. The child must learn his alphabet before it can spell and read, and it would not be punished for not knowing how to read before it has the letters learned. The horse, too, must have his a, b, c's taught him—so to speak. He has certain lessons to learn—and these lessons must be taught with patience and kindness. Only one thing should be taught at a time, and that should be done by and by understood. Then another step in advance can be taken; and when that is thoroughly learned, again proceed, and so on. There will be no difficulty. Everything proceeds by simples—everything is understood. Many men do things by rule. They give the horse's understanding the go-by. They don't seem to think he has any understanding or senses—but has he not? Cannot he feel, and smell, and see, and hear, and remember, as well as any of us, and even better? He must be taught through his senses and memory.—If you did not the horseman be, then, not only a very patient, a very kind and good man—but should he not love the animal which engages his attention? If he does not, is he not a genuine horseman. He will not treat him with that kind and tender regard that he should, if he does not love the animal which he handles.—Rural World and Valley.

Useful Hints.—Rich cheese feels soft under the pressure of the finger. To keep one that is cut, tie it in a cloth, put it in a cool, dry place. If mold appears on it, wipe it off with a dry cloth.

Flour and meal of all kinds should be kept in a cool, dry place.

To select numegs, pick them with a pin. If they are good, the oil will instantly spread around the puncture.
