Agricultural.

Deep Fall Ploughing.

At the meeting of the Massachusetts State Board of Agriculture, last winter, the matter of fall ploughing was fully discussed, and the weight of opinion decidedly seemed in favor of deep ploughing of heavy lands. Mr. Hubbard, of Brimfield, found in his experience in the cultivation of certain crops, that the fall is the best time to plough the ground; he thought that all will concede the fact, that the land, if it is heavy, clayed soil, can be worked much earlier in the spring by putting the manure on, and ploughing it in, in the fall. He did not care how soon it is put on after the crop is taken off; his advice was to "spread it on and plough it in; and so far as my experience goes, I have got a beter crop that way than by allowing the land to remain until spring, and then putting the manure on and then ploughing it in."

Mr. Ward, of Monson, thought that much depends upon the ground to be ploughed, whether it is ploughed in the fall. "If you have a tough, hard piece of ground that you desire to break up, it is better to plough in the fall; the frost has considerable effect upon the hard soil, and I do not think there is any great loss by the wind blowing off the surface soil. I think a light soil may as well be ploughed in the spring as in the fall."

Mr. Thatcher, of Lee, in speaking of deep ploughing in describing a subsoil attachment for a plough said: We are now using in southern Berkshire, a plough which turns over the sod from six to seven inches, with a subsoil attachment running from two to four inches, which still does not lift the virgin soil the first year to the surface. This attachment running behind the mould-board to the depth of four inches, usually stirs the whole width of the furrow to that depth after we have turned over the sod. Our idea is that by loosening the subsoil by this attachment, we enable the rains to soak down through, which they would not do, our subsoil being clay, (which will not take in water unless the earth was loosened), and our corn roots run down there to get their moisture. The effect of the manure is felt there; and the second year, when we come to plough up again after this stirring of the subsoil, we drop our ploughs down and throw up part of it. I think we certainly in our northern country derive a benefit by stirring the soil the first year, and very great benefit without lifting it to the surface, and then lifting it to the surface and mixing in the succeeding ploughing. I have in my mind a six-acre piece, which would not half feed a cow through the season. We could not get more than four or five inches of soil before we came to a hard clay soil, that retained the water upon it, making the land cold, backward and sour. After ditching that land, and putting in some underdrains, (which of course, benefitted it, without ploughing), we commenced ploughing this land in this way to get a deeper soil; not using the subsoil attachment that time, because we did not have it, but using a common plough, following the furrow afterwards, and lifting one or two inches at a time. I am speaking within bounds when I say that the second year, the crop of corn paid twice over the labor of ditching and double ploughing. It is as good a piece of land now, I think, as can be found in the town of Lee."

Deep ploughing of heavy lands, then, with clayey subsoils is to be recommended in autumn, and a plough which turns the sod and lifts and breaks the subsoil permitting it to fall back into its place, without bringing it to the surface, is the implement which seems most desirable. —Mass. Ploughman.

GLEANINGS.

Is is said the best strawberry plants come from the third and fourth sets of runners, and that the first and second sets should be cut off.

An orchard in Massachusetts which has been used as a hog pasture for twenty years, has never failed to produce a fine crop of fruit. A wormeaten apple is a rarity in that orchard.

The average life of a mowing machine is set down at five years; some will use a mower or reaper 20 years; but the average of farmers buy a new machine once in five years.

The Farmers' Club of the American Institute has resolved that the selling of common rhubarb, or pie-plant, in its different varieties, as a wineplant, is an attempt to deceive and defraud the public.

Animals of all kinds fatten more rapidly in dimly lighted places than when exposed to the full light of day. This is especially the case with fowls. Breeding stock, however, especially horses, should have light.

The Germantown Telegraph says: "In planting new strawberry beds, it is much better to delay the planting until September than to use small or feeble plants. Strong, vigorous plants will soon catch up to and pass the weaker ones, and give a fuller crop the following season. This should be remembered."

Rhubarb requires a deeply tilled and evry rich Soil to afford a supply of nutriment efficient to enable it to produce the immense crop of large succulent leaves which are removed from it in the season. The leaves should not be taken off in August or September, and a good top dressing of manure should be given before winter.

Herbaceous plants, as soon as they have done flowering, may be propagated by cuttings. These should be planted in a cold frame, in a mixture of sand and loam, and kept shaded until the roots have formed. They may be grown in a rich open border, if they are shaded and watered and kept in darkness, until the roots have struck.

Youatt, in his book entitled "The Horse," says this animal will never drink hard water if soft is within his reach; that he will leave clear transparent hard water for a pool or stream of soft even though the latter be discolored with mud. Very cold water from the well will make the hair raise up and not unfrequently cause an attack of the gripes.

A correspondent of the Horticulturist says that after trying numerous experiments with various applications for destroying the borer, and preventing a renewal of the attacks of the insect, he found nothing so effectual as the waste water from the salt works, commonly called "mother water," or "bitter water." He applies it at various intervals from June till August, putting about one pint of the liquid about the base of each tree.
