Agricultural.

The Moon and the Weather

At the late meeting of the "Scientific Congress" in Chicago, Professor Loomis presented a paper on this subject. He stated that from a comparison of twenty-eight years of observation in Germany, Schubler deduced a sensible influence of the moon, the number of rainy days at the time of the second octant being twenty-five per cent greater than at time of the fourth octant. From a comparison of observation, made at Paris, Orange, and Carlsruhe, Gasparin arrived at results not differing greatly from those of Schubler. By a comparison of sixteen years of observation at Greenwich, nine years at Oxford, and sixteen years at Berlin, Mr. Harrison of England has obtained results which are remarkably consistent with each other, and which indicate that the moon exerts an appreciable influence upon terrestial temperature, the maximum occurring six or seven days after the new moon, and the minimum about four days after full. The difference between the maximum near the first quarter, and the minimum near the last quarter is two and a half degrees of Fabrenheit. These results, which are so different from what might be anticipated, Mr. Harrison explains by supposing that the moon really attains its greatest heat about the last quarter, but that the heat which the moon radiates, to the earth is entirely dark heat, and therefore absorbed by our atmosphere. The heat raises the temperature of the air above the clouds, causing the increased evaporation from the surface, by which they are dispersed, and thus there is an increased radiation of terrestial heat to the sky, and consequently a diminution in the temperature of the air near the ground. He supposes that opposite results must occur at the period of minimum heat in the moon. In order to compare the influence of the moon with that of the sun, he has taken the average cloudiness of Greenwich, as indicated by observations made every two hours for a period of seven years, and the table shows,—the greatest cloudiness due to the moon's influence occurs about the time of the greatest heat; that is, near the third quarter, and the minimum follows about a week after the maximum, or about one-fourth the time of the moon's rotation. This disturbance of the vapor of our atmosphere gives rise to storms, during which vapor is precipitated, and a vast amount of latent heat is liberated. The motion of these storms over the earth's surface is influenced by local causes, such as latitude, proximity to the mountains or the ocean. The result the Professor found in the statement that the moon does influence the atmospheric phenomena in an appreciable manner; but, in ordinary parlance, the influence being so small, it may be so said that there is no influence of the moon upon the weather.

Intelligent Farming.

The time of comparative leisure with farmers is in approaching, and it may not be appropriate to suggest some considerations which will lead to such an improvement of this leisure as will turn it to good account. No farmer ought to consider his life as one for mere labor. There is something else besides hard work, or hand work, to be done on the farm to make it what it ought to be, and to derive the profit which it may yield. Head work is just as important as hand work. The former in times past was generally undervalued, but the present race of farmers have learned that intelligent farming is just as necessary as industrious farming; that in order to make the most of his pursuit and to reap the full benefit of his labor, every man who has a farm to manage must know the character of his farm, the nature of the soils, the crops that are best adapted to his lands, and the proper times and methods for putting in his crops and taking care of them.

Much knowledge may be obtained from the papers and magazines that are devoted to the subject of agriculture, and every farmer should take at least one good agricultural paper without regard to its cost; much information may be derived from books, and every farmer should have his agricultural library and should make good use of it; but in addition to all these sources of knowledge, each one should study his own farm, become thoroughly acquainted with it, just as he does with the disposition and capabilities of his horses.—This practical knowledge cannot be obtained from books or papers although it may be found by an application of what is read to one's own observation and experience.

We would recommend to every one who has a piece of ground to till, however large or small, to study its geography thoroughly; to make an accurate map of the whole by fields and tracts; to mark down the character of each portion, and to fix upon the crops that are best adapted to each, and their modes of tillage which each field or tract requires. This will enable him to enter upon another season with a methodical course of farming, which will be far more satisfactory and profitable than the haphazard, unvarying course which so many pursue from year to year. Such a course will afford ample room for reading and comparison and reflection during the coming winter, and we are sure will tell upon the fruits of another year's labor.

One of the great benefits which we anticipate in the establishment of Agricultural Colleges, and agricultural departments or studies of our school, is the promotion of such a course of intelligent farming. We do expect that our young men will finish their studies in graduating at these institutions, but that they will be prepared to enter upon a career of practical labor, combined with continued study, which will greatly elevate the profession or employment of farming by infusing into it more intelligence. This should not be left altogather to the young men, but every farmer should improve the advantages which are afforded at the present day for improvement in his calling.

WHOLE-MEAL BREAD.—Chemist and physiologists maintain that the very finely bolted and white flour which is so much sought after, is far less nutritious than what is termed middlings, or unbolted flour. The most nutritious ingredients of the grain,—the wheat phosphates and gluten,—are removed to obtain the desired whiteness.

Sickness should teach us what a vain thing the world is, what a vile thing sin is, what a poor thing man is, and what a precious thing an interest in Christ is.

THE TOWANDA REGULATOR
CLOTHING STORE!
Adjoining Patton's Block.

ROSENBERG & WOLFF,

Would respectfully announce to the citizens of Towanda and vicinity, that they have opened the above store, under the name of "The Towanda Regulator," with a splendid assortment

OF READY MADE CLOTHING!

Gents Furnishing Goods, Hats, Caps, &c., &c., which they assure the said citizens cannot be excelled in style or elegance, and that the prices are so low as to astonish everybody.—Rosenberg & Wolff hope that by strict attention, and fair dealing with the people of Towanda, they will obtain their patronage and support. They also beg to subjoin the following Commandments for their guidance.

COME ONE! COME ALL!

At Rosenberg & Wolff's One Price Regulator, Main Street, Towanda, Pa.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS,

Keep them, and Happy will be Thy Days.

1. Thou shalt have no other place to buy clothing except Rosenberg & Wolff's One Price Regulator, Main Street.
2. Thou shalt not choose any other merchant: though shalt not listen to their speeches, for Rosenberg & Wolff are no Chatham-st. dealers, but sell at one price, and reliable, and will serve you unto the third and fourth generation.
3. Thou shalt not seek in vain any more for cheap raiment, for they can be found at Rosenberg & Wolff's One Price Store.
4. Thou shalt bear in mind that we sell only on six days of the week, and don't desecrate the Sabbath by keeping our doors open and hangin out a show, for, on the seventh day, Rosenberg & Wolff, and their clerks, desire to rest from their labors.
5. Thou shalt honor the way Rosenberg & Wolff deal, and long may be thy days to enjoy its benefits.
6. Thou shalt not commit an impropriety—of buying of Chatham st. Dealers, but come direct to Rosenberg & Wolff's Once Price Regulator, Main street.
7. Thou shalt not seek in vain for goods of Foreign make, for Rosenberg & Wolff keep a large variety.
8. Thou shalt not purloin from the Regulator for Rosenberg & Wolff sell so cheap it would be a sin.
9. Thou shalt not bear false witness, but honestly acknowledge that you can get better suited and for less money, at Rosenberg & Wolff's than any other store.
10. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbors goods or his bargains, for Rosenberg & Wolff can give them to you likewise; therefore, take counsel, and buy only of Rosenberg & Wolff the Once Price Men.
