Agricultural.

Vegetables in House Cellars.

Probably few farmers are aware of the extremely deleterious effect of strong vegetables in considerable quantities in the cellar of the house beneath the apartments occupied by the inmates. There is always a large amount of exhalation from such heaps, when they become heated, as they do by laying in bulk, to say nothing of the decay of more or less vegetables in the heap, and before winter is out these noisome exhalations become so abundant and so strong as to "scent" the whole house.

Fevers and other diseases are the almost invariable result. The doctor's bill will generally be enough to have built a good vegetable cellar or pit for storing vegetables. Our friend, David B. Flint, Esq., of Watertown, having noticed several instances of disease in families that could, as he thought, be traced to this practice, addressed an inquiry to the State Board of Health, composed of the most eminent and competent physicians, and received the following reply;

"Having been requested to give an opinion concerning the effect upon health, caused by strong vegetables in the cellars of occupied dwelling, we would reply.

1st. That while such vegetables are entirely free from decay the practice is probably harmless.

2d. It is perfectly certain that decaying vegetable matter gives rise, in a way which science has not yet fully explained, to exhalations which are poisonous; that it taints the air with which it is in contact; that it seems to invite the attack of epidemics; that it diminishes the power of the body to resist disease of every kind; that it is especially favorable to the production of fevers.

3d. That the air of a cellar cannot be prevented from passing throughout the building under which it is placed.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the practice of storing the produce of the farm in cellars of dwelling houses, is always attended with danger, and ought to be given up, since the utmost care is required in the course of our long winters to prevent decomposition from taking place.

HENRY L. BOWDITCH, M. D.
GEORGE DERBY, M. D.
R. T. DAVIS, M. D.
Members of the Massachusetts State Board of Health.

Boston, Feb. 14, 1870.

The above unequivocal testimony from so eminent an authority ought to lead to an immediate abandonment of the practice among farmers and others, that is, the storing of vegetables, in large quantities and allowing them to decay.—Mass. Ploughman

Our Management of the Potato.

Is there another plant in cultivation which has for such a number of years been subjected to such barbarous treatment as the potato? We get a variety and grow it on for years from cuttings, many cultivators not even taking the trouble to change their seed—so called. Very probably, when we first obtained the variety, it was not of sound constitution, scarcely giving a bloom, and not a seed ball on a rood of ground. Still we persist in growing it, till—as a useful variety—it is killed. We then purchase another seedling at an almost fabulous price, and serve it the same. Are we to continue thus to the end, or shall we adopt a more rational method? I wish not to make assertions, but I do wish my horticultural and agricultural brethren would observe to raise every year some potatoes from seed, and whenever one is found to possess the necessary qualifications, with good strong growth, healthy foilage, and bearing seed, take care of it; that plant has a constitution capable of performing all the functions of its nature. Can the same be said of every new crack variety we get? Nay, do they not—most of them at least—begin to degenerate as soon as they get into cultivation? These ideas may appear crude enough, but probably some of your scientific correspondents can give us something elaborate; let it be in plain language, however, so that we ordinary mortals may understand.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

"HOLLOW HORNS."—Some time since I noticed an item in relation to "hollow horn" in your paper. If a farmer finds his cows begin to look rough, "hair turn the wrong way," leaving the roots of the horns—horns feeling cold, appetite beginning to fail, and milk too, if in milk—if he will open the animal's mouth, and examine the teeth—front ones—he will probably find them very easily moved in their sockets—that is, loose. If so, equal parts of sulphate of iron, copperas, green vitrol and nitrate of potash (saltpetre,) ground together—and a tablespoonful of the mixture given every day, either at once or divided, for three or four days, will probably save him from losing cattle with that disease. I learned this plan of detecting the disease and the remedy, many years ago, from a farmer, and have frequently tested it, and have so far had reason to say to others, try it.—Country Gentleman.

LEMON drops may be made by stirring the essence or extract of lemon into refined sugar into a clean pan. Having filled a pan with a lip, two-thirds full with paste, stir it over the fire with a bone or ivory handle until liquid. Then take it off and continue to stir it; thickening it if it runs too freely, by means of powdered sugar. Take off the drops from the lip by a wire, and let them fall on a bright tin plate. Remove them two hours afterwards with a knife. A drop or two of nitric acid, dissolved in a little water, intensifies the acidity of the paste when being prepared.

BAISSET OF BEEF STUFFED.—A piece weighing eight pounds requires about five or six hours to boil. Make a dressing of bread-crumbs, pepper, salt, sweet herbs, a little mace, and one onion, chopped fine and mixed with an egg. Put the dressing between the fat and lean of the beef, and sew it up tight; flour the cloth, pin the beef up very tight in it, and boil five or six hours. When it is done, take the cloth off, and press it until it is cold. This is to be cut in thin slices and eaten cold.

SWEETBREADS.—Trim them carefully, soak them first in cold water to extract the blood, and afterwards put them in boiling water to blanch them. Broil and serve with brown butter or lard, and roast them till thoroughly done, to serve on toast with nice veal gravy, or slice thin, dip them in egg, and fry in butter until well done, and nicely browned.
