Management of Cows.

Hugh T. Brooks discourses as follows upon this subject in the Western Stock Journal:

Butter, cheese, milk, and meat form a very large space in the most important department of sublunary affairs, and their full and cheap supply depends essentially on the proper management of cows.

To begin at the beginning, every householder should feel an irrepressible interest in the propagation and perpetuation of good milking animals. No person has a moral right to own or possess a good cow except "for the purposes therein set forth," viz: the largest supply of good milk, and the increase of her species—these legitimate ends we are bound to seek.

First, by breeding from milking families—scrupulously rejecting all males and females not descended from good milking stock.

Second, by providing young animals with a sufficiency of the right kind of nutriment. The milk vessels are developed by nutritious and succulent food, which should be liberally supplied from the very start.

A calf that maintains a precarious existence on poor hay and straw, and grows up without care or carrots, can scarcely make a good cow, even if it has good ancestors, and is well treated in after-life. There is no place for neglect in the milk business. All things require to be trained and developed for their proper sphere.

Third, docility and good behavior are essential characteristics of a good cow—they are secured by kindness and familiarity. Farmers should never neglect their calves, as they do their own families, unless they are willing to have them grow up wild and ungovernable. Cultivate in all these cases constant and kindly relations from the very beginning.

Fourth, guard against drouth in summer, and short supplies in winter, by securing early a good quantity of bran or shorts. These, as well as roots, pumpkins, apples, and well preserved corn fodder, are peculiarly adapted to the production of milk.

Fifth, cut your hay early! Woody fiber is a good thing in its place, or it never would have been sent, but no orthodox man has any right to believe that it is much adapted to dairy purposes. Cut your hay just as the blossoms fall. Keep it snug every night—no rains and no dew upon it. Be sure and dry it enough so that it will keep perfectly sweet, without must, and be sure and not dry it any more than is necessary.

Sixth, unless a cow is a remarkably good breeder, let her go farrow, feed her high, and milk her through the winter, and sell her to the butcher; do this as soon as she begins to fail, and while she is profitable to feed for beef.

Seventh, consider a good supply of good milk as a necessary of life, and never be without it. Milk can be secured by having a cow come in late in summer, or by having one—it would be the poorest—go farrow, and then go to the shambles.

Eighth, deformity and butter are not inseparable companions. You may have a good looking cow that will fill your pail quite as well as the historical "brindle cow with a crumple horn," crooked leg, shaggy coat, flat rib, sloping rump, and irrepressible back bone.

You may breed quite successfully for beef purposes, while you secure a good supply of most excellent milk.

Ninth, let everything be done decently cleanly, and regularly.

Tenth, provide good, warm, well ventilated stables, and never omit to groom and bed your animals.

Length of Whiffle-Trees.

A horse cannot draw as well with a whiffle-tree twelve feet long as with one two feet six inches in length, because the line of draught is not in the proper direction to be most effective. Nor can two horses, harnessed abreast, draw well with whiffle-trees ten feet long, while their heads are coupled close together, because they must travel sidewise, more or less, in which position no animal can exert all his strength to the best advantage in hauling a load.

Horses draw best with a double whiffl-tree just long enough to allow them to stand close to each other, having single whiffle-trees attached directly behind them, and just long enough to meet in the middle. When the double-tree is very long, each horse must draw more or less sidewise, if the coupling lines and the neckyoke are not made long enough to allow them to move directly forward without having their heads turned toward each other. In order to determine the correct length of whiffle-trees, let two horses stand side by side, with their sides three inches apart; then measure from the centre of one horse to the other on their backs. This will give the length for a neckyoke, and the correct length for the double whiffle-tree, between the joints where the single-trees are to be attached. When a neckyoke is only eighteen inches long, and the double-tree of the proper length, horses will be required to move more or less sidewise. For the same reason, oxen often get in the habit of hauling sidewise, because the yoke is too short. Neither oxen or horses can travel easily and freely, when their heads are turned toward, and their butts from, each other.

Whiffle-trees for plowing should always be as short as they can be made, without bringing the traces against the legs of the team. A very long double whiffle-tree tends to make a plow take to wide a furrow-slice. If the clevis be adjusted to take a narrow furrow-slice—when the double-tree is too long—the plow will not run at all satisfactory. The horse in the furrow will not be able to walk squarely in his place, because the line of draught is such as to keep crowding his hind feet out of the furrow on the plowed ground. The length of the double whiffle-tree and the neck-yoke for a sleigh should be just as long as the sleigh is wide, from the centre of one runner to the other.—The Manufacturer and Builder.

CERTAIN timbers of great durability when framed together, act upon each other so as to produce mutual destruction. Experiments with cypress and walnut, and cypress and cedar, prove that they will rot each other while joined together, but on separation the rot will cease, and the timbers will remain perfectly sound for a long period.

COCOA NUT CAKE.—One pound of sugar, one pound of cocoa nut, whites of three eggs, half tea-cup full of flour. Bake the same as macaroni cake.

To drink to your own health, drink alcohol.

CONSUMERS OF CONFECTIONERY!

COME,

LET US REASON TOGETHER!

How can any person manufacture Confectionery, and sell it at 15 cents a pound, when sugar is worth 16 cents at the Refinery, (unless it is terribly adulterated)?

How can any dealer retail such a vile compound to his customers and have a conscience void of offence?

How can any consumer expect to purchase pure Confectionery at twenty-five and thirty cents per pound when a pure article cannot be manufactured less than thirty to forty cents per pound, consisting of cassia buds, burnt almonds, and such class of goods?

Within a few days we have been offered cassia buds, etc., for fifteen cents per pound, and Chocolate Creams at twenty cents, and the agent acknowledged that they were adulterated ten per cent, with Terra Alba; and it is a fact that tons of this cheap Confectionery are made and sold in this country every year, and the consumers are the only persons injured by it.

Now, for the benefit of those who wish a Pure article of Confectionery, we will warrant every article of our manufacture Strictly Pure and free from every ingredient deleterious to health.
