PRIZE ESSAY: BY MISS NELL OLIVER, OF TROY HIGH SCHOOL, MAY, 1879.

FISHING.

We may fish and fish, but nothing worth the catching ever swallows an unbaited hook. A net may be spread ingeniously enough to ensure all sized fishes and folks, but it is idle to attempt to thrust a bare hook into the gills of either fish or flesh. This fact was learned in life's primitive days before we had outgrown "spools of thread for fishing lines and bended pins for hooks"—a fact which grows more prominent as we advance to more elaborate tackle, and aspire to larger fish.

Whether we angle for the finny treasures of the deep, or bob for the finless tribes that inhabit the remaining third of creation, our success depends largely upon our skill in covering the motive power employed.

Human nature abounds with laudable schemes for benefitting fellow mortals, but many of these benevolent designs are fruitless, because the well-wishers attempt to draw by main force rather than decoy by some agreeable bait. The means of attaining the desired object are made more prominent than pleasing, and so much real philanthropy runs to waste.

I would not advocate policy to the exclusion of sincerity, but experience has taught mankind that however great the necessity to administer a better pill, it will be taken more readily, and accomplish its purpose just as surely, if rendered palatable by a coating of tact. This disguising process has been very generally adopted by medicine-makers, and the once bitter, disgusting doses are now smoothly covered with gelatine, and are easily swallowed.

When civilization has advanced another grade, we are hoping that the "doctrine, instruction and reproof," prescribed by the Catechism, will be dealt out to us in an equally acceptable form, for truths, be they ever so wholesome, must be made attractive, or the people will not relish them.

We are all liable to be caught, indeed we expect and want to be caught, that is if the bait is fat and savory. There are many unscriptural Esaus bartering their birthright for pottage, who never afterwards complain of their bargains.

We all have our vulnerable points, tastes as capricious as those of the "speckled beauties," and which we as recklessly indulge. We bite eagerly at the bait which the changing seasons bring, and we can be taken in with the bright but flavorless false flies.

There are people who cannot fish; they are willing enough to sit on the bank of a pleasant stream and cast in their lines, but can never bring themselves to bait the hook, and therefore fail to catch any fish. Others are not patient enough to make good fishermen; they are not content to wait until sure of a bite, but jerk up the line at the first little nibble, and away swims the uncaught fish. This occupation requires a great deal of that quiet determination that bustling people often mistake for indolence.

Some one has said "There is a vast difference between laziness and perseverance." The steam that escapes from an engine makes a terrible noise, but the uncondensed vapor that we do not see or hear does the work.

We ought all to learn to fish even if we never go near the water, and especially should those whose watchword is reform, possess some knowledge of the ways and means of catching and holding hearts.

When Christ bade His disciples become "fishers of men" He intended them to use the same persuasive arts practiced in the vocation from which he chose his figure, but his followers of to-day, when they set their outlines sometimes forget the bait.

We who are still floundering in the depths of worldliness, have been angled for by man, many times, "line upon line, and precept upon precept," has been flung to us, but for want of a sinker the line, floating near the surface, was too obvious, even for our uneducated eyes.

If only those who are trying to draw souls to the Better Land would always fish with baited hooks, mended nets and invisible lines, and could oftener distinguish between a nibble and a bite, there would be fewer "disappointing splashes" as the almost saved sinner falls back into the dark waters and floats farther and farther from the fisherman's reach.

Food for Health.—Sunlight is especially necessary for the healthy existence of children. The influence of light is a matter of the highest importance to the proper physical development of the human species; and whatever stints the growth of a child certainly operates upon his physical capacity for labor; the amount of disease among persons occupying light rooms is infinitely less as compared to that in dark ones; and that the influence of light, especially solar light, in preventing the fatal termination of disease, is a fact well known. In illustration of this subject, it is stated on the authority of Sir James Wylie, "that the cases of disease on the dark side of an extensive barrack at St. Petersburg have been uniformly, for many years, in the proportion of three to one, to those on the side exposed to strong light."—Public Health.

Some time since one of the fortune-telling mineral discoverers, who had been duping the good people of Canton and Union, became much elated by seeing a specimen of sulphureb of iron from the Barclay coal mines. He pronounced it gold, thus placing himself in a trap that was set to catch him. A practical application of the principles to Geology will prevent useless expenditure of many dollars. People who claim to have supernatural knowledge or powers, are practicing deception, and it is proper that every teacher in our land should impress this thought in the minds of their pupils. Knowledge is an acquired power, and it would seem that the days of the fortune-tellers, finding water by the peach twig, planting in the moon, etc., ought to be numbered with the things of the past.

Reading.—One of the first requisites in reading is distinct articulation; and as distinct articulation depends on being able to give the sounds of the letters composing a word; it is necessary to teach the sounds of the letters of our pupils, to teach them to read. We believe a pupil could be taught to read without knowing the names of the letters, but they cannot be taught to read without knowing their value—their sounds.

County Superintendent Ryan has visited all the schools in the county during the first year of his term. There are four hundred and seven schools in the county.
