MONDAY MORNING, Nov. 30, 1863.

Pittsburgh Consolidation.

We Pittsburghers are in the habit of thinking our city a decidedly important one. We know the extent, the excellence, the variedness of our manufactures, and we know that in that respect Pittsburgh is surpassed by scarcely any city in the country. In the various manufactures of iron, there is probably not a city in the Union that equals it. Some of us like to call Pittsburgh the Birmingham of America, while others think it would be more appropriate to call Birmingham the Pittsburgh of England.

But strangers have not so high an opinion of our city as we have. This is proved by the fact that in all enumerations of the important cities of the Union, that we meet with, in newspapers, periodicals or books, Pittsburgh is almost sure to be left out. It is common for us to see in such enumerations the names of cities which, we know, can bear no comparison with ours, either as to population, commerce, manufactures, or wealth, whilst ours is omitted. This cannot but be mortifying to us, and it does us very great injury as well as injustice. Why is it so? The Philadelphia North American, a short time ago, gave the answer. It is because the population which actually belongs to Pittsburgh, is set down in the census, and in all other works on statistics, as belonging to not less than a dozen different places. We have Allegheny, Manchester, Duquesne, Sharpsburg, Lawrenceville, East Liberty, Wilkinsburg, Birmingham, East Birmingham, South Pittsburgh, West Pittsburgh, Temperanceville, and we know not but a half dozen others, all set down as separate and distinct places, and in most cases without anything to indicate that they are within a hundred miles of Pittsburgh, while in fact they are all parts of it.

The census of 1860 shows the population of Pittsburgh to be 49,217, while that of Cincinnati is 161,044. The same census shows that from 1850 to 1860 the population of Pittsburgh increased 2,616, while that of Cincinnati, in the same time, increased 45,608. According to the census, Pittsburgh is to all intents and purposes a finished city—one that has fully come to its growth, and is ready to fall into decay; while the increase of population in Cincinnati from 1850 to 1860 is almost equal to the whole population of Pittsburgh. Now, how in the face of this showing, can Pittsburgh expect to be considered equal to Cincinnati by those who are ignorant of the true state of the case, as nineteen-twentieths of the people in the United States are?

The census of 1860 gives Allegheny city a population of 28,702. These are just as much a part of the population of Pittsburgh as are the residents of the Fifth or Ninth wards; and yet there is nothing in the census to show that Allegheny is any nearer Pittsburgh than Erie or Harrisburg are. The same is true of Birmingham, and Manchester, and all the other towns that we named above. The population of the whole of them is, in the strictest sense, a part of the population of Pittsburgh. Their manufactures, their commerce and their wealth belong as much to Pittsburgh as if they were in one of its own wards, and yet it gets credit for none of them, either in the census or any other book of statistics. If we add the population of Allegheny alone to that of Pittsburgh, it would run it up to 77,919; and if to that we should add the population of the boroughs and villages immediately around the city, the total would be little, if anything less than 120,000. If the census and other statistical books showed that Pittsburgh had such a population, the city would get the credit for importance that it is justly entitled to; but as long as things remain as they now are, it must be content to take rank among insignificant country towns.

The North American says that, for a long time, Philadelphia labored under the same difficulty. It was cut up into a great many independent corporations, each of which got credit for its own population; and in that way the population of the city proper was reduced to a comparatively insignificant figure. The remedy they applied, and which proved effectual, was consolidation. The North American recommends the same remedy for Pittsburgh. What do our people, and especially our merchants and manufacturers, whose prosperity depends so much on the high standing of the city, think of it? If Allegheny and all the boroughs and villages around the city, with the space lying between them, were made a part of Pittsburgh, and all placed under the same laws, ordinances, and officers, would it not be greatly to the benefit of the whole?

We write this article to bring the subject before the people, and we ask them to give it that attention which its importance entitles it to. Consolidation has worked well in Philadelphia, and we can see no reason why it should not work equally as well here. At first there were there serious difficulties to be overcome, as for instance, the adjustment in the new consolidated corporation, of the debts due by each of the old corporations, but the practical good sense of the people soon removed them all, in such a way as to give general satisfaction; and the same would be the case here.

By the act of consolidation the lines of Philadelphia city were made commensurate with those of Philadelphia county. We could not make the lines of Pittsburgh commensurate with those of Allegheny county, that would be giving them too wide a sweep—but—and we make the suggestion that the people may think of it—we might start the line on the Allegheny river above Sharpsburg, and run it so as to include that borough, Stewartstown, Duquesne, Allegheny, and Manchester, down to below Woods' Run, then crossing the Ohio, run it so as to include Temperanceville, Mount Washington, West and South Pittsburgh, and the two Birminghams, and then crossing the Monongahela, run it to the Allegheny at the place of beginning, giving it such a direction between the two rivers as to take in East Liberty and Wilkinsburg. As we said, we name these boundaries merely by way of suggestion to those who, when their attention is turned to the subject, will be far more likely than we to arrive at a correct conclusion in regard to it.

Would it not be well for the councils to give the subject of consolidation their consideration, and take such action in regard to it as will bring it fairly and fully before the people?

Dismissing Officers.

We note in the dispatches from our several armies, reports of dismissals of officers for such offences as disloyalty, insubordination, drunkenness, cowardice, and more of the same grade than we could venture to enumerate. Why it is that officers so offending are dealt with in this way, we are not able to understand, unless it is supposed that, while the Government is squandering large sums of money to recruit the army, it can afford to relieve enlisted men from service, by way of punishment for their short-comings. If a private offends, he is punished in a different way. Many of the officers are from the ranks. If they misbehave, why not strip them of their commissions and return them to the ranks again? Is there any reason why they should be discharged, because they have been guilty of acts which disqualify them for their trusts? It is discretionary with the Government whether it will accept the resignation of an officer, in any case. If he may make sure of it by disorderly conduct, what is this but a premium for misbehaviour? Why should a man who has been enlisted for three years, and afterwards advanced, be discharged from his obligation of service, because he has violated it, any more than a private in the ranks? Why should he be even allowed to resign, except for such reasons as would entitle a private to his discharge? We cannot imagine why it is so. It seems to us that it is an abuse, or at least an error, that is pregnant with mischief, and calls loudly for correction at the hands of the Government.

Description of Various Points of Interest in Tennessee and Georgia.

CHICKAMAUGA STATION

is named after Chickamauga Creek, which finds its source in Walker county, Georgia, and flows into the Tennessee river at Chattanooga.

RINGGOLD

was named after the gallant Major Ringgold, who fell early in the Mexican war. It is twenty-two miles south of Chattanooga. Near this place are the celebrated Catoosa mineral springs.

TUNNEL HILL,

thirty one miles south of Chattanooga, on the Western and Atlantic Railroad, stands in Murray county, Georgia, where the mountains seem to come together, forming a sublime, a terrific amphitheatre, as though with a Titanic purpose of humbling in the railroad. The tunnel at this place is 1,437 feet long, eighteen feet high, and with a clear width of twelve feet. This cut is in a great measure through solid rock, the lateral walls of rock being six feet thick at the base and five feet at the top. The approaches to the tunnel are protected on both sides by massive masonry.

DALTON,

is thirty-eight miles from Chattanooga, and beyond the tremendous range of mountains which almost entirely fill the space between this place and the state line.

Its location is in a beautiful and fertile valley, environed by mountains, from the summits of which the eye is regaled with the grandest scenery. This section of Georgia was the largest grain producing county in the State. All around Dalton are excellent limestone springs, which will afford an abundance of pure water for our men, both for purposes of drinking and bathing. Gen. Grant has passed the most stubborn portion of the country when he arrives at Dalton.

The distance then to Atlanta is about hundred miles, through a rather poor section of Georgia, only disturbed by an occasional range of monster hills, and a dozen or more forlorn, struggling villages and towns. The railroad will, no doubt, be put immediately in motion between Chickamauga and Dalton, the latter place, probably, serving as a sort of sub-base for supplies, which must be furnished previous to the direct movement upon Atlanta.

CLEVELAND

is twenty seven miles Northeast of Dalton, and eighty-three miles from Knoxville. It is one of the termini of the Cleveland and Dalton railroad, and the East Tennessee and Georgia railroad runs through it.

Results of Emancipation.

The editor of the Nashville Union, writing from Washington, give the following in regard to the results of emancipation in the District of Columbia:

Many of our friends in Tennessee are asking with much solicitude, what shall we do with the slaves when liberated? Let me give the substance of conversations which I have had with several late slaveholders, who reside in this District, and after an experience of negro freedom of over two years, thus bear testimony in this important case. I inquired of these gentlemen, all of high social position, as follows:

"What has been the general effect of emancipating the slaves in this District?"

"Decidedly beneficial to both masters and slaves."

"Have you suffered any considerable social convulsion in consequence?"

"None at all; matters have progressed as smoothly as ever."

"Are the negroes insolent and lawless?"

"Not so much so as formerly. They feel that they are now standing on their good behavior alone."

"Have you much trouble in procuring laborers?"

"None at all; the negroes work readily and faithfully for wages. They do their work better than ever, because they know that they must either fulfill their contracts or get no pay."

"Do the people regret the change which emancipation has effected?"

"No, hardly one man in the whole District, except a few politicians, would vote for the restoration of Slavery. Mr. ——— and Mr. ———, who were both large slaveholders, and opposed emancipation bitterly, now declare openly that they never want to see Slavery restored."

Certainly this evidence is important, and worth the consideration of Tennesseeans. Let us act honestly toward the slaves, and then the consequences will take care of themselves. Let us offer "greenbacks" instead of cowhides to the negro, and he will work with fresh alacrity and hope. He has a soul; let us treat him accordingly. If we use our numerical superiority to rob him of his natural rights and defraud him of his wages, we will pull down upon our own heads and the heads of our children the just penalty of our guilt, amid the merciless tempests of a social revolution.

S. C. M.

In Western Virginia a bill has passed the House and is now before the Senate, authorizing the Governor to hire out the convicts of this State, in the penitentiaries of adjoining States, or, in some other manner until the State shall have provided a proper place to keep them.

A very pretty fight is going on among the Spiritualists. Andrew Jackson Davis against the Free Lovers. They accuse him of "Puritanic Grundyism," which means only some proper regard to the decencies of life, which the Free Lovers are too elevated to have any respect for.

FOR SALE—ROLLING MILL FOR SALE.—I offer for sale on easy terms, the large and extensive Iron Works known as the "Hanging Rock Rolling Mill." This mill is situated at Hanging Rock, on the Ohio river, in the heart of the COAL and IRON region of Southern Ohio, one hundred and forty miles above Cincinnati, and immediately upon the river, accessible at all stages of water, and therefore possessing facilities for shipping superior to any mills above this region.
This mill is inferior to none in the West, either for CAPACITY or DURABILITY of finish, being entirely NEW and in the best of repair—is supplied with COAL, delivered in the MILL without any trouble whatever, except unloading it from cars. Water is connected with the property about 6 acres at ground, and 12 dwelling houses, all within one hundred yards of the mill. Also two wells of good water close to the mill—is supplied with machinery as follows:
6 double fined boilers, 28 feet long, 42 inches in diameter; 1 lever engine, eight feet stroke, 22½ inches diameter cylinder; this engine drives muck mill, bar mill, chair mill, small mill, refinery blast, muck shears and squeezers. 1 slide valve engine, 5 feet stroke, 22½ inches diameter, driving boiler plate mill, sheet mill, hammer and sheet shears. 1 doctor engine, 2 foot stroke, 10 inches diameter, driving lathe, grind stone, bar and small mill shears, and pumping all the water for the mill and boilers.
Also with 10 boiling, 3 heating, 2 sheet and 1 boiler plate furnaces. Also smith and carpenter shops, with all the necessary tools.
This sale to take place at the door of the Court House, in Ironton, on Saturday, Dec. 12th, 1863, at 1 o'clock p. m.
S. H. HEMPSTEAD,
Attorney for Mary A. Hempstead.
Hanging Rock, Nov., 1863.
