DAILY POST.

ANOTHER INSTANCE OF GOV. ANDREW'S INSUBORDINATION.

Probably One of the Reasons why Gen. Stone is in Disgrace.

From the Boston Post of Tuesday.

Governor Andrew's Hunter letter is not the first outburst he has made in the way of inciting insubordination, in attempting to control the soldiers of the United States who had been enlisted in Massachusetts. In December last he addressed a letter to Lieut. Col. Palfrey, then commanding the Twentieth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, in which he ordered him not to allow his soldiers to be employed in returning fugitive slaves. Governor Andrew, like Mr. Charles Sumner, did not stop to inquire whether those troops had been so employed or were likely to be so employed; but having heard the word "negro," rushed on blindly, like the bull at the scarlet cloth. Col. Palfrey, of course, transmitted Governor Andrew's extraordinary letter to his Commanding General, and General Stone again transmitted it to General McClellan, with a letter which we print below. This letter was copied and sent by Gen. McClellan's order to Governor Andrew. We understand that, at the same time, General McClellan addressed another letter directly to Governor Andrew on the same subject, and in the same vein:

[COPY.]

HEADQUARTERS CORPS OF OBSERVATION, POOLESVILLE, Dec. 15, 1861.

BRIG. GEN. S. WILLIAMS, Assistant Adjutant General:

GENERAL—I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a most extraordinary letter, addressed by authority of a Governor of a State directly to the Lieutenant Colonel commanding a regiment of United States volunteers, serving in this division, and respectfully request that the matter may be brought to the attention of the Major General Commanding, in the hope that he may be able to devise measures which shall in future prevent such unwarrantable and dangerous interference with the subordinate commands of the army.

The fact that most of the soldiers in the regiment referred to were enlisted into the service of the United States in the States of which the Governor referred to is the respected Chief Magistrate does not, I conceive give his Excellency a right to assume control of the interior discipline of the regiment; nor does it give him authority to command the punishment of a meritorious officer, for any offense, either real or imaginary.

If the officer referred to has been guilty of any offense (which I am free to say I do not believe he has been,) the military law prescribes the mode of preferring charges and the channels through which they shall be preferred, as well as the mode of trial and the extent and manner of punishment.

While I endeavor to hold those under my command strictly amenable to stern military law, which they have sworn to obey, it is equally my study to protect all whom I have the honor to command against wrongs attempted to be inflicted on them in defiance of the laws of the Union—the supreme law of the land.

Thousands of brave men gathered into the service of the Union (the whole Union) from five or six different States of the Union, are now serving in this division, and enduring, unmurmuringly, cold, hardship and fatigue, simply because ambitious State politicans have unconstitutionally used their power to wrest from United States officials the trusts confided to them by the nation.

The usurpations of those ambitious State authorities commenced in much smaller matters than this of assuming authority in a United States regiment serving in the field against a public enemy, far removed from the State of which his Excellency is Governor; and it matters little to me whether the usurpation comes from North or South, Georgia or Massachusetts, I feel it my duty to bring the matter at once to an issue, and, if possible, to arrest the evil before its natural fruits (open rebellion) shall be produced.

The course of Major Anderson, one year since, in referring to the internal affairs of his command in Fort Sumter, on the part of the Governor of the State in which he was serving the Union, was eminently distasteful to the Governor of South Carolina. Nevertheless, Major Anderson's sense of duty prevented him from fulfilling that Governor's desires.

Disagreeable as it may be to me to do anything distasteful to the Governor of any State of the Union, I do not feel that it is consistent with my sworn duty to permit any Governor to give orders affecting the discipline of any regiment which the Government of the Union has entrusted to my command.

I am not aware that there are here Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, or Massachusetts troops. I do know that there are here United States troops, collected from all those States, and that they are taught that their duty is to serve the United States honestly and faithfully against all those who set themselves in opposition to the Constitution and laws of the United States, whomsoever the opposers may be.

I will merely add, for the satisfaction which I know it will give to the Major General commanding, that I do not believe that in the instance of the officer referred to in the letter of the Governor nor in any other instance, the orders of the War Department in reference to fugitive slaves have been violated by officers of the division; and I am equally happy to state that in no instance within my knowledge and recollection (with one exception) have the laws on the same subject of the State in which we are serving been violated by the officers of the division. In that case the officer offending promptly retired from the service.

I have the honor to be, General, very respectfully, your most obedient servant.

(Signed) CHAS. P. STONE, Brig. Gen. Commanding.

STORY OF THE WINTER-LIGHT.

"How could that be?" thought Carl to himself.

"And I believe," suggested Franz, maliciously, to aggravate the anxiety of the nephew, "that you have not dedicated it to him, or at least presented him with a copy."

"But you know," returned Carl, with considerable energy, "he never reads printed books—he detests literature; besides, I never disguised from my uncle that I was engaged on the work."

"He says you've libeled him. But hark! I cannot stay any longer. Heinrich Heine is calling me; so, good morning, Master Carl Heine." Saying this he shut the door in the face of the young enthusiast.

The unfortunate nephew required no further explanation. With a heavy step and heavier heart he turned to leave. But where should he go? He was himself penniless, a pensioner on his uncle's bounty. He had offended his sole protector, whom he knew too well not to feel that the consequence would be terrible. His inheritance, too, had vanished. Those heaps of gold which were to be his and Lotchen's, and which were to make their days so bright and blissful, and with which he was going to reform mankind and restore peace and good-will upon earth, and achieve more than the political economist or a chancellor of the exchequer could dream of—all this fine treasure was lost to him. And now what course was he to take? what was he to do? The heart in its distress turns naturally to the object it most confides in. To Lotchen, therefore, he went.

On his arrival, however, at the house of his future father-in-law, instead of smiles, he found mysterious whisperings and cloudy looks. The servants seemed disaffected: and on entering the parlor Lotchen was in tears, and her father standing by her side plunged in profoundest thought. What was the matter?

Wilhelm Ritter, a merchant of good repute among his fellow-citizens of Frankfort, was looked up to on the Borse as a fortunate speculator. Not but that calculating notaries would sum up casual losses he had incurred of late; and prying gossips would tell of frequent conferences with Heinrich Otterbein. But then was not rumor also busy with reports of a different, though not discrepant character? Was it not every where circulated that the nephew of the rich miser, the heir-expectant of all his treasure, was betrothed to the fair daughter of the fairest gentlemain in the free city of Frankfort-on-the-Main? And how could scandal hold up its head against such a mighty combination of facts? And so for a while scandal remained silent.

It so happened, however, that on the morning after Heinrich Otterbein was seen plodding his weary way home late at night over the old stone bridge, as we have already mentioned, Franz, the confidential clerk of Heinrich Otterbein, had been sent to the house of Herr Wilhelm Ritter, and, with an audacity uncommon in men of his stamp, began to talk freely with the servants in the merchant's hall. He even insinuated to them that it was not all right with the affairs of their master: that the fine house and fine furniture he posssessed would soon fall to the auctioneer's hammer; and that if Mistress Lotchen married Master Carl Heine she would marry a pauper who had not knowledge of the world enough to earn his own salt.

In the mean time a letter had been conveyed to Herr Wilhelm: and it was the contents of this letter which caused such grief and consternation to the father and daughter.

Without entering into details on the subject of the note we may state that it appeared the merchant Ritter had speculated considerably, but without success: that he had also borrowed largely from Heinrich Otterbein, and that by this means, and, in fact, by being obliged to have his bills renewed, he had placed himself completely in the miser's hands. Indeed the letter, which insisted upon the immediate payments of certain bonds then due, or shortly to become due, but which the miser refused as heretofore to renew, told him he was a ruined man. There was a postscript in addition forbidding the merchant to harbor or even to receive into his house, his vicious and unnatural nephew, Carl Heine, on the pain of some disclosures which, through the mist of her tears and the confusion of her grief, Lotchen could not understand.

She saw, however, that her father grew deadly pale as he read the postscript, and with a vehemence he had never exhibited before, exclaimed that he was not only a ruined but a doomed man.

Carl Heine stood entranced before Herr Ritter and Lotchen. Neither the father nor the daughter essayed to speak, and his perplexity increased proportionately. For a moment a faint, melancholy smile broke through the tears of Lotchen, and that was enough to give heart to the young author. He sprang to the side of his betrothed, and would have seized her hand, but that she hastily withdrew it.

The hand, however, which she refused to him, pointed to a letter lying on the table. He took it up, read it, and at a glance saw through it all.

"Good heavens!" he exclaimed, "this is all my fault! The fatal passage, the fatal passage!" then, throwing himself at the feet of Lotchen, in a broken voice he earnestly implored her and her father's forgiveness, vowing that he would appease his uncle by any sacrifice, or at least that they should not suffer on his account. "Besides, who knows but this may be only a passing passion of my uncle's? A week or a fortnight, or at most a month, will calm his anger, and all will be right again."

"Never," rejoined Herr Wilhelm; "he never relents. I know it all; you have offended your uncle too deeply. He is implacable and vengeful, or he would not have sought to punish us through you. O my daughter, my daughter!" he continued, "you alone are innocent, yet must suffer most."

Lotchen threw her arms around her father's neck, and entreated him to pacify himself.

"Impossible! I am a ruined man. Henceforth I must be a beggar—and something worse."

* * * * * *

Christmas-eve had commenced. Biting breezes and icy flakes of snow, that fluttered and fell from a leaden sky, ushered it in. Nevertheless, the world seemed cheerful and merry, and the bells of old Frankfort rang out a merry peal.

Heinrich Otterbein was uneasy and restless that night. For eight days he had refused to admit into his presence the stately merchant Herr Wilhelm Ritter, his beautiful daughter Lotchen, who had made many earnest appeals for an interview, or his contrite and broken-hearted nephew. Their letters and petitions had been returned unopened.

Yet Heinrich Otterbein was uneasy and restless in his own mind. Vainly had he unlocked his money-chests, and toyed with the glittering heaps they contained; vainly he rummaged his drawers and counted over his wealth in bills and papers; vainly he took down the ponderous tomes that swung on a shelf above the desk. Nothing would engage his disquieted spirit; and for once he unbarred the shutters of a small, quaint window that looked upon the street, and, half-opening them, gazed on the scene outside.

It was, as we have said, Christmas-eve. The street was crowded with persons hastening in one direction. They were for the most part muffled up, for the weather was bleak and tempestuous; but there could be no doubt as to their destination. They were going to hear midnight mass.

Presently three figures, habited in deep mourning, flitted past the house like shadows. The miser started back for a moment; then, bending forward, watched these shadows pass until they vanished in to the darkness.

A sudden impulse then seized him—an impulse which for nearly half a century had never moved his frame. Taking down from a peg a thick cloak or mantle, and his slouched hat, he quietly quitted his office, and followed in the direction of the figures who had attracted his attention.

TO THE PUBLIC.

IS PECULIARLY the ignorant and false by Modest of all denominations, treat secret and delicate disorders, self-abuse and diseases or [illegible] incident to youths of both sexes, and adults, single or married. Because DR. BRANSTRUP publishes the fact of his doing so, the ignorant and falsely modest are dreadfully shocked, and think it a great sin very immoral and for contamination and corruption among their wives, promising sons and daughters. Their family physician should be cautious to keep them in ignorance that they do the same as DR. BRANSTRUP, (except publishing) lest a lucrative practice might be lost to them among stupid falsely modest and presumptuous families, born and raised in ignorance, sprung up as mushrooms and who compare society, intelligence, sense, &c., to dollars and cents, mysteriously, meanly oriliy gotten. It is to publicity, however, that numerous parents and guardians are thankful that their sons, daughters and wards, previously feeble sickly and of delicate condition and appearance, have been restored to health and vigor by DR. BRANSTRUP, besides many before and after marriage through him have been saved much suffering, anxiety, mortification, &c. Spermatorrhea or nocturnal emmissions, are completely cured in a very short space of time by his new remedies, which are peculiarly his own. They are compounds from the Vegetable Kingdom, having seen the fallacy of the Mercurial treatment, he has abandoned it and substituted the vegitable Female diseases are treated with marked success—having had over forty years (40) experience in their treatment in hospitals of both the Old World and in the United States; leads him to say—to all with a fair trial, health and happiness will again bloom upon the now—pallid cheek. Trifle no longer with montebanks and quacks, but come and be cured Consumption and all of its kindred diseases, of which so many annually fill our countries, can now be relieved, providing they attend to it in time Full particulars can be had of my treatment by procuring a copy of the Medical Adviser, which is given gratis to all that apply Having the advantage of over forty years experience and observation, consequently, he has superior skill in the treatment of special diseases, and who is daily consulted by the profession, as well as recommended by repectable citizens, publishers, proprietors of hotels, &c. TO OIL REFINERS

THE UNDERSIGNED HAVE MADE arrangements to fit up Oil Refineries, under Dr. Tweddle's Patent TROMP APPARATUS, patented February 4th, 1862, by which fire is rendered totally unnecessary in distilling Rosin or other Oils, and we guarantee our work cannot be excelled in durability, simplicity or economy.

We refer with confidence to the following parties, whose Refineries we have fitted up:

Messrs. Long, Miller & Co., Petrona Works; Wightman & Anderson, Eagle do; S. M. Kier & Co., Excelsior do; Alex. Taylor & Co., Jefferson do; Lockhart & Frew, Brilliant do

The above works were designed and constructed and put in operation by Dr. H. W. C. TWEDDLE

The following works we have also fitted up:

Economy Oil Company, Darlington; Messrs. Chadwick & Crumpton, Kittanning; Johnson Graham & Co., Woods' Run; Brewer, Sill & Co., Pittsburgh; Reese & Graff, do; Johnson & Brother, do; Forsyth Bros. & Co
