SELECT TALE.

MARY MOORE.

All my life long I had known Mary Moore. All my life long, too, I had loved her.

Our mothers were old playmates and first cousins. My first recollection is of a young gentleman in a turkey red frock and morrocco shoes, rocking a cradle, in which reposed a sunny-haired, blue eyed baby, not quite a year old. That young gentleman was myself, Harry Church; that blue eyed baby Mary Moore.

Later still I saw myself at the little red school-house, drawing my painted sled up to the door, and arranging my overcoat on it that Mary might ride home. Many a black eye I have gained on such occasions; for other boys liked her besides me; she, I am afraid, was something of a flirt, even in her pinafore. How daintily she came tripping down the steps when I called her name! how sweetly her blue eyes looked up to me from the envious folds of her winter hood! how gally her merry laugh rang out when, by dint of superhuman exertions, I kept her sled before the rest and left her standing on the steps exultingly to see them all go by! The fairy laugh! No one but Mary could let her heart lay up so on her lips! I followed that laugh up from my days of childhood till I grew an awkward, blushing youth—I followed it through the heated noon of manhood, and now, when the frosts of age are silvering my hair, and many children climb my knee and call me "Father," I find that music still. When I was fifteen, the first great sorrow of my life came upon me. I was sent away to a Western school and was obliged to part with Mary. We were not to see one another for three long years! This, to me, was a sentence of death, for Mary was like life to me.—But hearts are very tough things after all. I left college in all the flush and vigor of my nineteenth year. I was no longer awkward and embarrassed, I had grown into a tall, slender, strapping, with a pretty good opinion of myself in particular. If I had thought of Mary Moore, it was to imagine how I would dazzle and bewilder her with my good looks and wonderful attainments, never thinking that she might dazzle and bewilder me still more; I was a sad puppy, I know, but as youth and good looks have fled, I trust I may be believed when I say the self-conceit has left me also.

An advantageous proposal was made to me at this time, and accepting it, I gave up all ideas of profession and prepared to go to the Indies. In my hurried visit home I saw nothing of Mary Moore. She had gone to a boarding school, in Massachusetts, and was not expected home till the next fall. I gave one sigh to the next fall. I hove one sigh to the memory of my little blue eyed playmate, and then called myself a man again.

"In a year," I thought, as the stage whirled away from our door, "in a year, three at the most, I will return, and if Mary is as pretty as she used to be—why then perhaps I may marry her."

I stroked my budding moustache with complacency, while I settled the future of a young lady whom I had not seen for four years. I never thought of the probability of her refusing me—never dreamed that she would not stoop with grateful tears to pick up the handkerchief whenever I chooses to throw it at her feet.

But I now know that had Mary met me then she would have despised me. She was as far above me as the heavens is above the earth. Perhaps in the scented and affected student she might have found plenty of sport; but as for loving me, or feeling the slightest interest in me, save a regret that I should make such a donkey of myself, I know she would not.

India was my salvation, not merely because of the plentiful supply of gold I had laid up, but because my earnest labor counteracted the evil of my nature and made me a better man. And when at the end of three years I prepared to return, I wrote nothing to the dear ones I was about to meet of the reformation which I knew had taken place. "They loved me as I was," I murmured to myself, "and they shall find for themselves if I am worth the loving as I am."

I packed up some of my gold for the friends I was to meet. The gift for Mary Moore was one I selected with a beating heart. A ring of rough virgin gold, with my name and her's engraved inside. That was all, and yet the little toy thrilled me strangely as I balanced it on top of my little finger.—To the eyes of others it was but a small, plain circlet, suggesting thoughts, by its daintiness, of the dainty white hand that was to wear it. But to me—oh, me, how much was embodied there! A loving smile on a beautiful face—low words of welcome—a happy home and a sweet face smiling there—a group of merry children to climb my knee—all these delights were hidden within that little ring of gold.

* * * * * * *

A tall, bearded, sun-bronzed man, I knocked at the door of my father's house. The lights in the parlor windows, and the hum of conversation, and the cheerful laughter showed me that company were assembled there. I hoped that my sister Lizzie would come to the door and that I might greet my family when no stranger's eyes were looking curiously on. But no—a servant answered my summons; they were too merry in the parlor to heed the long absent one when he asks for admittance. Some such bitter thought was passing through my mind, as I heard the sound from the parlor and saw the half suppressed smiles upon the servant's face.

I hesitated a moment before I made myself known, or asked for the family.—And while I stood silent a strange apparition grew up before me. From behind the servant peered out a small, golden head, a tiny, delicate form followed, a sweet childish face and blue eyes were lifted to mine, so like the one that had brightened my boyhood that I started back with a sudden feeling of pain.

"What may your name be, little one?" I asked, while the wondering servant held the door.

She lifted up her head as if to shade her. (I had seen that very attitude in another, in my boyhood, many and many a time) and answered in a sweet, bird like voice,

"Mary Moore."

"And what else?" I asked.

"Mary Moore Chester," lisped the little child.

My heart sunk down like lead. Here was an end to all the bright dreams and hopes of my youth and manhood. Frank Chester, my boyish rival who had often tried in vain to usurp my place beside the girl, had succeeded at last, and won the woman away from me! This was his child—his child and Mary's. And I must go in there and meet her once again and then go away forever and die—if God would let me!

I sank body and soul beneath this blow and hiding my face in my hands I leaned against he door. The little one gazed at me grieved and amazed, and put up her pretty lips as if about to cry, while the perplexed servant stepped to the parlor door and called my sister out to find out who it could be that conducted himself so strangely.

I heard a light step and a pleasant voice saying:

"Do you wish to see my father, sir?"

I looked up. There stood a pretty sweet faced maiden of twenty, not much changed from the dear little sister I had loved so well; I looked at her a moment and then stilling the tumult of my heart by a mighty effort, I opened my arms and I said:

"Jennie, don't you know me?"

"Harry, oh my brother Harry!" she cried, and threw herself upon my breast.—She wept as if her heart would break. I could not weep. I drew her gently into the lighted parlor, and stood with her before them all. There was a rush and cry of joy; and then my mother and my father sprang towards me, and welcomed me home with heartfelt tears. Oh, strange and passing sweet is such a greeting to the way-worn traveler. And as I held my old mother to my heart and grasped my father's hand, while Jennie clung beside me, I felt that all was not yet lost, and though another had secured life's choicest blessing, many a joy remained for me in this dear sanctuary of home.

There were four others, inmates of the room, who had arisen on my sudden entrance. One was the blue-eyed child whom I had already seen, and now stood by Frank Chester, clinging to his hand.—Near by stood Lizzie, Mary Moore's eldest sister, and in a distant corner, where she had hurriedly retreated when my name was spoken, stood a tall and slender figure, half hidden by the heavy window curtain that fell on the floor.

When the first rapturous greeting was over, Jennie led me forward with a timid grasp, and Frank Chester grasped my hand.

"Welcome home, my boy," he said, with the loud, cheerful tones I remembered so well. "You have changed so much I never would have known you—but no matter for that, your heart is in the right place, I know."

"How can you say he is changed?" said my mother, gently. "To be sure he looks older and graver, and more like a man than when he went away, but his eyes and his smiles are the same as ever. It is that heavy beard that changes him. He is my boy still."

God help me! At that moment I felt like a boy, and it would have been a blessed relief to have wept upon her bosom, as I had done in my infancy. But I kept down the beating of my heart and the tremor of my lip, and answered quietly, as I looked in his full, handsome face:—

"You have changed, too, Frank, but, I think, for the better."

"Oh, yes, thank you for the compliment. My wife tells me I grow handsomer every day."

His wife! Could I hear that name and keep silent still?

"And have you seen my little girl?" he added, lifting the infant in his arms, and kissing her crimson cheek. "I tell you, Harry, there is not another like her in the United States. Don't you think she looks very much like her mother used to?"

"Very much," I faltered.

"Hallo!" cried Frank with a suddenness that made me start violently, "I had forgotten to introduce you to my wife; I believe you and she used to be playmates in your days. Eh, Harry!" and he slapped me on the back. "For the sake of old times, and because you were not here at the wedding, I will give you leave to kiss her once—but mind, old fellow, don't repeat the ceremony. Come—here she is, and for once I will manage those ferocious moustaches of yours in the operation."

He pushed Lizzie, laughing and blushing, toward me. A gleam of light and hope, almost too dazzling to bear, came over me, and I cried out before I thought: "Not Mary."

I must have betrayed my secret to every one in the room, but nothing was said—even Frank was this time silent. I kissed the fair cheeks of the young wife; and hurried to the silent figure looking out of the window.

"Mary—Mary Moore," said I, in a low voice, "have you alone no welcome to give the wanderer?"

"I am glad to see you here, Harry."

Simple words—and yet how blest they made me! I would not have yielded up that moment for an Emperor's crown.—There was the happy home group and the dear home fireside and there sweet Mary Moore! The eyes I had dreamed of by night and day were falling beneath the ardent gaze of mine—and the sweet face I had so long prayed to see was there before me—more beautiful, more womanly and more loving than before!—I never knew till that moment the meaning of happiness.

* * * * * * *

Many years have passed since that happy night, and the hair that was dark and glossy then is fast turning grey. I am growing to be an old man, and can look back to a long and happy, and well-spent life. And yet, sweet as it has been, I would not recall a single day, for the love that made my manhood so bright, shines in the old man. Can this be so? At heart I am as young as ever. And Mary, with her hair parted smoothly from a brow that has a slight furrow in it, is still the Mary of my early days. To me she can never grow old or change. The heart that held her in infancy and sheltered piously in her the flush and beauty of womanhood can never cast her out till life shall cease to warm it. Not then, for love still lives in heaven.

A Great Cigar Steamer in London.

According to the latest Scientific American, they are now building in London a cigar steamer of not less than 700 feet in length. The principles of its form and construction are similar to those of the famous eigar steamer—built in Baltimore a few years ago—with this exception, that instead of a wheel amidship, there are to be screw propellers fore and aft. The new steamer is being constructed by the Messrs. Winans, who, it will be recollected, built the original one, now at their wharf in Baltimore.

The Art of Printing.

A jubilee will soon take place in Vienna in honor to the four hundred years' existence of the art of printing in that city.—The first Vienna printer, Ulrich Hann, opened his printing office in 1432, but did not succeed, and emigrated to Rome.—He was the cause of the Emperor Frederic IV bestowing a privilege on the printer, in the year 1468, which placed them in equal rank with noblemen and scholars, and permitted them to wear a sword.

SOLDIERS are fond of pets. In the absence of mothers, sisters and young ladies to lavish their affections upon, they steal all the pretty kittens and dogs they can find in the road, and treat them with the utmost kindness. I saw a soldier in Burnside's army with a pretty Maltese kitten sitting on the top of his knapsack, which he told me he had brought all the way from the Peninsula. It was fat and sleek, and would perform a great many tricks which he had taught it. That soldier will fight all the better for having even a kitten to pet and talk to.

THE PRICES OF PAPER.

The prices of paper are rising.
'Tis said,—but I can't think it's true:
If so, it is very surprising,
And rags should be very scarce, too,
But rags fly in every direction,
They're flaunting on Burnside's brigades,
From shoulders of every complection,
From arms wielding muskets or spades.
You'll find them on those whose pay wages
Don't allow them to buy cotton goods.
On the poor of all sexes and ages;
Who may live in the towns or the woods.
The token that buys you a lunchen
Is nought but a "government" rag.
And you pay for your hot whiskey punch in
A brown "postage currency" flag.
Old statutes are torn into patches,
And go scudding about thro' the air,
And the old Constitution a batch is
Only fit for a rag-dealer's fair!
The people's best hopes are in tatters,
And their hearts, too, are rives and rent;
Yet in spite of these rag-making matters,
Paper rags two hundred per cent.

Notice to Cotton Buyers.

General Dodge, commander of the District of Corinth (Mississippi), has issued an official notice to cotton buyers, to the effect that only persons who have been duly authorized by permits can be permitted to purchase cotton in that district; that permits must be approved at Headquarters in Corinth; that merchants must employ agents of unquestionable loyalty; that no sub-agents must be employed; and that no cotton can be shipped unless there is satisfactory proof that it was bought of a loyal man. All persons in the service of the government are prohibited from dealing in cotton. Infractions of these regulations will be punished by confiscation and imprisonment.

Paper from Corn Husks.

The Mechanics' Magazine says that "excellent paper is now made in Europe from the leaves of Indian corn. There is one paper mill in operation in Switzerland and one in Austria in which paper is made from such leaves exclusively. The husks which envelope the ears of corn make the best quality." It is also said in an exchange that a foreigner has filed at Washington an application for a patent for various uses made of corn shucks. The varieties include yarn, maize cloth, paper of beautiful quality (white and colored) from silk to parchment texture.

THE University of Vermont, out of 82 medical and 64 academical students, has sent 28 to the army.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.
THE ADVERTISER HAVING BEEN restored to health in a few weeks, by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dreadful disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow sufferers the means of cure.
To all who desire it, he will send a prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c
The only object of the advertiser in sending the Prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.
Parties wishing the prescription will please address Rev. EDWARD A. WILSON,

A FRIEND IN NEED. TRY IT—DR. SWEETS INFALLIBLE LINIMENT is prepared from the recipe of Dr. Stephen Sweet, of Connecticut, the great bone setter, and has been used in his practice for the last twenty years with the most astonishing success. As an external remedy it is without a rival and will alleviate pain more speedily than any other preparation. For all Rheumatic and Nervous Disorders it is truly infallible, and as a cure for Sores, Wounds, Sprains, Bruises, &c., its soothing, healing, and powerful strengthening properties, excite the just wonder and astonishment of all who have ever given it a trial. Over four hundred certificates of remarkable cures, performed by it within the last two years, attest this fact.

PRIVATE DISEASES.
Dr. BROWN'S MEDICAL and SURGICAL Office, No. 50 Smithfield street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.
Dr. BROWN is an old citizen of Pittsburgh, and has been in Practice for the last twenty-five years. His business has been confined mostly to Private and Surgical Diseases.
CITIZENS AND STRANGER
In need of a medical friend, should not fail to find out the sure place of relief. The Doctor is a regular graduate, and his expense and treatment of a certain class of diseases is a sure guarantee to the sufferers of obtaining permanent relief by the use of his remedies and following his advice.
DR. BROWN'S REMEDIES
never fail to cure the worst form of Venereal Diseases, Impurities and Scrofulous Affections.—Also all diseases arising from a hereditary taint, which manifests itself in the form of tetter, psoriasis, and a great many forms of skin disease, the origin of which the patient is entirely ignorant. To persons so afflicted, Dr. Brown offers hopes of a sure and speedy recovery.
SEMINAL WEAKNESS.
Dr. Brown's remedies for the alarming trouble brought on often by that solitary habit of sensual gratification, which the young and weak indeed often give way to, (to their own destruction,) are the only reliable remedies known in the country—they are safe, and make a speedy restoration of health.
RHEUMATISM.
Dr. Brown's remedies never fail to cure this painful disease IN A FEW DAYS—he will warrant a cure. He also treats Piles, Gleet, Gonnorrhoea, Stricture, Urethal Discharges, Female Weakness,
