IMPORTANT FACTS.

DR. LEIDY'S Sarsaparilla Blood Pills are applicable in all cases, whether for Purgatives or Purification. They possess all the boasted virtues of other pills, and are additionally efficacious, containing Sarsaparilla in their composition, which is not contained in any other pills in existence. They are also different from other pills in composition, being purely vegetable, and can be employed at all times, without any danger, and requiring no restraint from occupation or usual course of living.

Notwithstanding Dr. Leidy never pretended his Blood Pills would cure all diseases, yet it is not saying too much of them, from the innumerable cures performed by them in every variety and form of disease (certificates of many of which have been published from persons of all denominations, physicians, clergymen, and others) that they seem to be almost universal in their effect; and persons using them for whatever sickness or disease, may rest assured that they will be found more efficacious than any other pills in existence.

From the known reputation of Dr. Leidy's Blood Pill, it is necessary to remind the public where they can at all times procure the genuine, as it is attempted to impose other pills, called the 'Blood Pills' upon the public on the reputation of Dr. Leidy's. ☞ Be particular and ask for Dr. Leidy's Sarsaparilla Blood Pills and see that the name of N B. Leidy is contained on two sides of each box, (the boxes being of paper, and oblong, square shape, surrounded by a yellow and black label.

PRICE—25 cents a Box.

Prepared only, and sold wholesale and retail, at Dr. Leidy's Health Emporium, 191 North Second street, below Vine, Philadelphia, and by B. A. FAHNSTOCK & CO., corner of Wood and Sixth streets, Agents for Pittsburgh. jy 12—ly

DENNING'S FIRE PROOF IRON CHESTS
PITTSBURGH, Oct. 22, 1842.
J Denning: On Friday, the 30th of last month, about 9 o'clock at night, the Planing, Grooving, and Sash Manufactory, owned by Gay, Dilworth & Co., with a large quantity of dressed and undressed lumber, was all consumed by fire.
The Iron Safe which I bought of you some time back was in the most exposed situation during the fire, and was entirely red hot. I am pleased to inform you it was opened at the close of the fire, and all books, papers, &c., saved;—this is the best recommendation I can give of the utility of your safes.

THE TAILOR CREDITOR.

BY MRS. GORE.

People plead guilty to duns;—The word carries an air of defiance with it which they fancy becoming.—But few like to talk of their creditors!—a name which, by conveying a consciousness of legal responsibility, conveys also a wound to their self-love. Yet, from the moment that, by drawing breath, to that when the bell, tolling over our remains, conveys a pecuniary liability to our inheritors, life is a series of indebtments.—Thrice happy the man who sleeps solvent upon his pillow! But scarcely less pitiful the wretch who lays his head there absolutely debtless—untrusted either because untrustworthy, or because unwilling to accord credit in return!

The pre-eminence of Great Britain among nations is ascribed by the farthest sighted philosophers to the magnitude of her national debt, and but for the stimulus of private liabilities, where would be the best works of the best authors?—the best pictures of the best artists?—the best articles of the best magazines? The high-mettled scribbler starts off at speed on the slightest spur of a dun. The Scotch novels are in a great measure the works of the creditors of Scott: and but that I, as becomes a gentleman, have creditors of my own, how should I be able to furnish the following "Accounts" for the amusement of my readers?

It was not, however, in quite so cheerful a mood that I first conceived the project of turning their Accounts to account, causing them to repay me with interest all I happened to owe. My parents, who died when I was a schoolboy, having been what is called "unfortunate," (that is imprudent,) I was bequeathed to the guardianship of a crabbed uncle, with so small a patrimony, that I and it together seemed scarcely worth the trouble of looking after. To me, however, those three thousand pounds appeared to contain a mine of wealth; and, in my vague notions of independence, I scorned all mention of articles to attorneys, clerkships in counting-houses, apprenticeships to apothecaries; already smitten with the wild desire of becoming a man of wit and pleasure about town.

According to the privilege of uncles well to do in the world, mine called me a fool. But he had said as much of my parents when ruined by speculation; and in his house I had already begun to understand the opprobrious word, according to a lexicon especially Great British, as the synonyme of "poor." But, foreseeing myself both wealthy and wise—that is, being so great a fool as to judge myself capable of achieving wealth through my own wisdom—I snapped my fingers at my uncle and betook myself to the lean and hungry occupation of polite scholarship. Like other enthusiastic lads to whom parental coercion has been wanting, I fancied myself a man of genius. Pactolus seemed waiting to flow through my hands; and it needed only a stroke of my poetic wand to convert the waters of oblivion into claret and champaigne.

Of course the first thing that flowed through my hands was my small fortune. Till I attained my majority, I lived upon tick; and the first act of my first year of discretion being to discharge to the last doit my obligations; established a credit much to my credit, and little to my advantage. Convinced that the efforts of my pen would enable me to strike a future balance as readily as in the present instance, by inducing a draft upon my uncle's bonheur, I persisted in the personal engagements which had converted my inheritance into a four years' income. My tragedy, my comedy, my epic, my farce, my annual, my magazine, were destined to metamorphose all future creditors into my most obedient humble servants.

Alas! the only transformation I ever witnessed in them was from creditors into duns. Perceiving me to be a man of honor by the readiness with which I discharged the illegal obligations of my minority, they set me down as soft, and became proportionably hard.—By degrees mistrusted, eventually trusted no longer: there came to be a sort of poetic license in the cut and texture of my garments, such as constitutes in itself an act of bankruptcy.

Still, I was young and sanguine. As I ascended in my lodging, story above story, I was only soaring a poetical flight. I thought of Milton, of Otway, of Goldsmith, and comforted by prospective immortality, overlooked my mortal necessities. Moreover, an occasional sparkle of gold dust on the surface redoubled my faith in the latent mines below. The first time I pocketed a guinea as the guerdon of two months hard labor, writing leading articles for a weekly paper, I beheld myself the founder of a future Abbotsford—a baronet—and member of parliament.

At that moment, indeed, I even forgot my creditors. But my creditors, alas! did not forget me. With all my flights, I had only attained a third pair of stairs; and steep and ricketty as they were, you might have fancied them as smooth as an inclined plane or the verses of Rogers, and carpeted with Axminster, so pleasant appeared the ascent to every succeeding age in whose books I had inscribed myself pending the triumphs of my own. It seemed a mall to the brutes—a ring, a cour la reine, a prater, a chaussee for their daily exercise and delectation. My bell had a silver sound in their ears—and they came both "single spies" and in "battalions."

I paid—when I could—and at length promised to pay—when I could; an expression they seemed to hold too vague and figurative, for most of them (probably for the pleasure of possessing my autograph as a literary man) required me to say as much, and sometimes a little more, upon paper. Now, my autograph happened to be precisely that of my crabbed uncle, for that he became, for reasons of his own desirous of withdrawing it from circulation. He was, therefore, at the trouble of collecting the first series of these springs of my pen, apprizing me, at the same time, that my next performance of the same nature might be in the hands of the attorneys, and the unfortunate issue in good till the day of judgment, for any effort it would make towards the redemption of silver.

In former days, it was held a christianly thing to release captives from thrall; and kings on their death beds, and ladies fair in pain used to make vows of ransom for so many victims of the Moors. But other kings or countesses of modern times extend the tender mercies towards the victims of sheriff's officers, and I accordingly determined that, whatever bills might be brought against me, I would give more in return. I was beginning to understand the value of my own autograph.

This resolution only increased my influx of visitors. The sneaks crowding to write their names in the sinner's book of a royal giver of fetes are not more numerous than the little knot of uncrediting creditors who daily assured me that they were tired of having to remind me of their claims—as though I were as equally tired of hearing of them! Custom has appropriately assigned the office of dunning to the most disagreeable moment of the year—the moment when the two ends meet, though our own do not—the dark "daylight dies" so soon after its birth, that it scarcely seems worth while for it to have come in at all—when the sun is seen as through a cloud darkly, and when we emerge from our chambers into a chilly atmosphere,

"The bravest quake his breath
For a time!"

In those days of darkness and desolation, the list of single books is great in the land. Parallelogrammatic bills, wafer-sealed and unsightly, make their appearance at every door. Not a tyro of a clerk but seems to be learning to draw in figures. Saints and sinners unite in bidding their fellow-creatures be [illegible] D—d; and, knowing our inability before them, and their own ignorance in asking, request us, at our earliest convenience, to settle their small account. The world seems bent, in short, upon prolonging the weariness of spirit the brevity of the shortest day of the year!

Among mine enemies (at the period when I was beginning to comprehend the identity between an-
