From Blackwood's Magazine.

☞ We shall now venture on an extravaganza which might have been well illustrated by Hans Holbein. It is in the ultra-Germanic taste, such as in our earlier days, whilst yet the Teutonic alphabet was a mystery, we conceive to be the staple commodity of our neighbours. We shall never quarrel with a wholesome spice of superstition, but, really, Hoffmann, Apel, and their fantastic imitators, have done more to render national literature ridiculous, than the greatest to redeem it. The following poem of Goethe is a piece of sarcasm directed against that school, no the worse, perhaps, that it somewhat outrods in its ghostly and grim solemnity. Like satires, too, it verges closely upon the so e back it against any production of M. G.

THE DANCE OF DEATH.

warder look'd down at the depth of night
On the graves where the dead were sleeping,
And clearly as day, was the pale moonlight
O'er the quiet churchyard creeping.
One after another the gravestones began
To heave and to open, and woman and man
Rose up in their ghastly apparel!

Ho—ho for the dance!—and the phantoms outsprung
In skeleton roundel advancing,
The rich and the poor, and the old and the young,
But the winding-sheet hindered their dancing.
No shame had these revellers wasted and grim,
So they shook off the cerements from body and limb,
And scattered them over the hillocks.

They crook'd their thighbones, and they shook their long shanks,
And wild was their reeling and limber;
And each bone as it crasses, it clinks and it clanks
Like the clapping of timber on timber.
The warder he laugh'd though his laugh was not loud;
And the Fiend whispered to him—"Go, steal me the shroud
Of one of these skeleton dancers."

He has done it! and backward with terrified glance
To the sheltering door ran the warder;
As calm as before look'd the moon on the dance,
Which they footed in hideous order.
But one and another seceding at last,
Slipp'd on their white garments and onward they pass'd,
And the deeps of the churchyard were quiet.

Still, one of them stumbles and tumbles along,
And taps at each tomb that it seizes;
But 'tis none of its mates that has done it this wrong,
For it scents its grave-clothes in the breezes,
It shakes the tower gate, but that drives it away,
For 'twas nail'd o'er with crosses—a goodly array—
And well was it so for the warder!

It must have its shroud—it must have it betimes—
The quaint Gothic carving it catches,
And upwards from story to story it climbs
And scrambles with leaps and with snatches.
Now wo to the warder, poor sinner, betides!
Like a long-legged spider the skeleton strides
From buttress to buttress, still upward!

The warder he shook, and the warder grew pale,
And gladly the shroud would have yielded!
The ghost had its clutch on the last iron rail
Which the top of the watch-turret shielded.
When the moon was obscured by the rush of a cloud,
ONE! thundered the bell, and, unswathed by a shroud,
Down went the gaunt skeleton crashing!

A very pleasant piece of poetry to translate at midnight, as he did it, with merely the assistance of a dying candle!

AGRICULTURE.

We make some extracts from that excellent farmers's journal, the Albany Cultivator, which will be of service to our readers.

Raising early Cucumbers.—I G Dickerson, of Lyons, Wayne county, New York, one of the most successful cu tivators of garden vegetables, adopts the following mode of raising early cucumbers. He makes his hot-bed at the usual time, and when the soil is placed upon the stack of manure, pieces of tuf are placed just below the surface, on which the seed are planted. If the grass of the tuf is alive, it is to be put upside downwards. On the arrival of warm weather, and when the soil in the open air becomes fit for cultivation, these pieces of turf are removed entire, with the young plants upon them, and placed in highly manured ground, where they are finally to grow. In this way the roots are taken up without the least mutilation, consequently no check is given to their growth. Afterwards, whenever there is any probability of a night frost, each hill is covered with a bell glass. These glasses have a small opening at top, which prevents the sun scorching the plants in case they are not removed in time; they are obtained at the glass-works in the neighborhood, for four cents a piece; but where they cannot be had, boxes with panes inserted, will answer nearly as well.

Effects of Ashes.—Peter Crispell, of Hurley, Ulster county, states that he raised last year, on one acre of land, three tons twelve hundred and eighty pounds of hay, at one crop. The hay was in merchantable condition, and of good quality, as will appear from the fact that it was sold at eight dollars per ton, and was all weighed on the scales. The soil where this crop grew was a dry, loamy alluvion, and had been in grass many years. Last spring Mr Crispell spread on a hundred bushels of leached ashes to the acre, which cost eight cents per bushel. The ashes increased the quantity of hay nearly one-half, and from former experiments in the use of them, it is known that their effects continue for several years. Mr Crispell has made some trials with both leached and unleached ashes, and the results, in his case, would seem to show that the unleached are not more valuable than the leached. He thinks that ashes which have lain some time after being leached are much more valuable than when they are applied immediately after leaching. He states that this is also in accordance with the experience of several of the Long Island farmers with whom he has conversed.

Culture of Mustard.—James H. Parmelee, of Duncan's Falls, Ohio, raised, last year, twenty-seven acres of the black or brown mustard. It appears that it was planted in hills one foot apart one way and two feet the other, the crop being well worked during the season. The twenty-seven acres produced by Mr Parmelee's account, 457 bushels, or nearly seventeen bushels per acre. It may be sown as soon as the ground is in proper condition to work.

Experiments in Planting.—The advantages of free admission of light, and free circulation of air to the growth of plants, are in a good degree obvious to persons of any experience in agriculture. So important are these influences to Indian corn, that an advantage is known to the result from giving the widest space to rows running north and south. This more readily unites the light and heat of the sun, than rows running in a contrary direction. It has been suggested that planting corn and potatoes in alternate rows, or in alternations of two rows each, would give a greater aggregate product for a given extent of land, than if each crop were planted entirely by itself. Experiments relative to this point have been made in Massachusetts for a few years past, under the direction of the Plymouth county agricultural society, and the results so far indicate considerable advantage in favor of the mode of alternate planting. Mr. Nathan Whitman, who received, for an experiment of this kind, made last season, a premium of $15, planted half an acre with corn alone; from this was harvested 42-43 75 bushels; half an acre with potatoes, from this was harvested 136 7-56 bushels; and half an acre in alternate rows of corn and potatoes; from this was harvested 22 50-75 bushels of corn, and 79 40-56 bushels of potatoes. In this experiment there appears to have been a gain in mixed planting of ten bushels to the acre, and twenty-six bushels of potatoes. Some experiments reported to the New York society in former years, showed about the same results.

Peas, for early use, cannot be sown to soon after the ground is enough to work. Select a warm piece of ground, rather sandy, and do not put on too much rank or strong manure, as it tends to throw the peas too much into vines.

The pea crop is a very profitable one in many situations. Sown on a sod furrow, it furnishes an excellent preparation for wheat, or any other crop. Very hot weather seems not to be favorable to the filling of peas; therefore it is advisable to sow them so early that they may get well advanced before the hottest and driest part of the summer comes on.

Peas and oats are sometimes sown together, and are considered profitable. Ground into meal, they form an excellent food for fattening hogs and other animals; and in sections where Indian corn cannot be well grown, are highly esteemed.

WARRANTED GENUINE.—Dr. WILLIAM EVAN'S CAMOMILE PILLS.

CERTIFICATES.—Letter from the Hon. Abraham M'Clellan, Sullivan County, East Tenn., Member of Congress.

WASHINGTON, July 24, 1845.

SIR—Since I have been in this city I have used some of your Dyspeptic medicine with infinite benefit and satisfaction, and believe it to be a most valuable remedy. One of my constituents, Dr A Carden, of Campbell county, Tennessee, wrote to me to send him some, which I did, and he has employed it very successfully in his practice and says it is invaluable. Mr Johnson, your agent at this place, thinks you would probably like an agent in Tennessee. If so, I would recommend Dr A Carden, as a proper person to officiate for the sale of your celebrated medicine. Should you commission him he is willing to act for you. You can send the medicine by water to the care of Robert King & Sons, Knoxville county, Tennessee, or by land to Graham & Houston, Tazwell, East Tennessee. I have no doubt but if you had agents in several counties in East Tennessee, a great deal of medicine would be sold. I am going to take some of it home for my own use, and that of my friends, and should like to hear from you whether you would like an agent at Blountville, Sullivan County, East Tennessee; I can get some of the merchants to act for you as I live near there. Yours respectfully,

ABRAHAM M'CLELLAN, of Tennessee.
