RAILROAD SCHEMES IN PENNSYLVANIA.

In consequence of some difference between the Erie Railway Company and the Atlantic and Great Western Railroad Company, touching the transportation of freight and passengers for the latter over the road of the former, a plan has been devised for a new trunk road from the West to the East.

The Morris and Essex Road having been completed through to the Delaware river, the Atlantic and Great Western Company has either leased that line or made arrangements for adding a third rail to its track. It has also leased the Catawissa road, thus bringing the connection as far as the Susquehanna river at Milton. From thence it proposes in some form, not yet announced, to effect a connection with its own road at Corry.

From Milton to Corry, the line is one hundred and seventy-eight miles long, and is already covered by the Philadelphia and Erie Road.—Whether the managers of the Company owning that road have, or will consent to an agreement for a third rail, to accommodate broad gauge coaches, is not yet stated. But the great distance, as well as the inconvenience and delay which would attend the construction of a new parallel line, give force to the conjecture that a bargain has been made or is under negotiation, with strong probability of success. From Corry to Salamanca is sixty-one miles, and if the new programme shall be carried out, this section of road will become of comparatively small value to the Atlantic and Great Western, unless that Company shall come to an ultimate agreement with the Erie Railway Company, in which case it will have access and exit to and from New York in two distinct ways.

When the line by way of Milton shall be completed, the passage from Cleveland to New York will be shortened 128 miles, as compared with the former route by Salamanca, and thence down the Erie road. This is an important difference both as regards time and expense.

So consequential a movement, as a matter of course, excites opposition. The New York Central, and the Erie Railway Companies are largely interested to thwart the scheme. Perhaps, also, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. If an arrangement has been made for a third rail on the Philadelphia and Erie from Milton to Corry then it must be assumed that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, owning as it does that line, are interested in the scheme. Certainly its execution would throw a valuable and remunerating traffic upon that 178 miles road. But the attitude of the Philadelphia journals leads to the inference either that such arrangement has not been made, or if made that it does not meet with general approbation in that city.

Now, Philadelphia is an important city. It stands second in population and wealth of all the cities of the Union. Moreover, it is a metropolis of which any Commonwealth might well be proud. Pennsylvania is proud of her—both for what she is, and for the historic recollections which are embodied in her. Her welfare ought to be consulted in matters of legislation. It would be an act of folly to cripple her prosperity under the pretence or the reality of magnanimity towards the commercial emporium of any other city. But Philadelphia is Pennsylvania, and it would be most unwise to retard or prevent the development of other portions of the Commonwealth, holding latent vast resources that might be rendered available for the good both of the State and nation, simply because nature had interposed such geographical configurations to territories, that easier and cheaper access can be had to market in other directions.

The sixty or seventy thousand inhabitants drawn into Venango county, for instance, within the last few years, and the enormous development of wealth there, are as important to the Commonwealth as though they had been added to Philadelphia itself. The same rule holds good as to all the other counties which are so situated as not necessarily to be tributary to Philadelphia. The general good demands the largest freedom for those public works designed for the purposes of inter-communication. Of course, there will be rivalry between competing towns and cities. It would be as pernicious as it would be absurd to eliminate the spirit of rivalry from the minds of business men of communities. Within fair limits, rivalry is a sort of motive power of incalculable value. It clears away the forests, opens mines, bores for oil, makes iron, and does all those acts and things whereby a wilderness is converted into a garden, and abodes of plenty made to spring up in the desert. But when rivalry hardens into selfishness, and holds a competitor to be an enemy, the case is altogether changed.

THE REBEL COTTON LOAN.—The list of subscribers to the Rebel Cotton Loan, as published a few months ago, was correct, it seems, notwithstanding the denials of several of the parties named in it. The list comprises quite a number of members of Parliament, and several of the Editors of the London Times, and these gentlemen, in their denials, confined themselves simply to saying, that they never "subscribed" to the loan. This is probably true. They did not subscribe to it, but the Rebel leaders assigned them liberal shares in it, which they doubtless would have claimed had the Rebellion succeeded. Their interest in the loan was prospective, only; and that interest was the price paid for their support of the Confederacy.

LOUISIANA.—The refusal of the Louisiana Senate to decorate their Chamber with the United States flag, is another strong reason for the early readmission of that State to the Union. The representations ought to "keep it before the people" constantly.

Spain and Chili.

The demand for copper has probably saved Chili from a costly war, and forced Spain to abandon a project by no means creditable to her.

Chili has copper mines; when the news of the Spanish Admiral's insolent ultimatum reached London the price of copper suddenly advanced; it was seen that to blockade the Chilian coast would be to stop that part of the supply of copper which the Chilian mines furnish. At once the merchants complained to Lord Russell, the British Government consulted with the French, and the two united in a remonstrance to Spain, which was, and was intended to be, effective.

Copper appears to be king in this case, and their mines of greater account Because their coun- to the world, [illegible]

VARIOUS ITEMS.

A WORD FROM A BEREAVED FATHER.—The family of Henry Mendell, living on the corner of Watson and Peckham streets, met with a sad accident on the evening of the 4th inst. It seems that the father had just come home from his work, and his wife was lighting a kerosene lamp, when one of the children overturned it, and the oil poured in and around the room; a conflagration took place, in which the flames in was known over Mrs. Mendell and her child on. They were fearfully burned, and one of the children (Josephine) died. The state of his injuries, Mrs. Mendell at last accounts was not expected to live. Her face is so very much burned and swollen that she cannot be recognized by any person that knew her. Mr. Mendell, in trying to save his children and wife, had his hand burned so much that he is suffering severely. Another child was more or less burned, but is not thought to be in any danger.—Buffalo Express, Dec. 7.

THE WINE CROP OF FRANCE.—Of 80 French departments only 11 are not wine growing, of the others, 68 produce all they grow, and 58 export. In France there are upwards of 2,200,000 proprietors of vines. The average annual produce of wine during the four years 1858 61 was upwards of 58,000,000 hectolitres, which is equivalent to more than 800,000,000 imperial gallons. The wine growers are thirty souls, for upwards of 15,000,000 hectolitres are set down as consumed by them. Paris in 1863 drank 2,696,555 hectolitres of wine, besides about 534,660 hectolitres of spirits, beer, cider and perry. Setting down the population of Paris at 2,000,000, including the floating population of strangers, the allowance per man is far dome, if we consider how little the women and children consume.

The Journal de Rouen tells a pathetic story of the effects of imagination in the case of a poor woman of Rouen, who had promised her dying husband that she would not marry again. After four years of widowhood, she was wooed by one to whom her heart inclined. At the same time she was torn with secret remorse. On All-Souls' day (Nov. 2), she went to pray at the tomb of her husband, and there implored his pardon for having thought of another marriage. In her frantic state she imagined that, in response to her prayer, the word "never" came from the grave, and she fell into a swoon. When assured that she was able to relate the occurrence, but in fact from one convulsion to another until she expired.

HOW WE CONQUERED FREEDMEN.—The Washington Star says:

"Reports now arriving at the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, &c., give highly encouraging accounts of the manner in which the business of the Bureau is being carried on in the southwestern states. Hospitals and camps are being provided for the sick freedmen, and a large number have already been established. Homes are being furnished and work supplied to great numbers of the idle and suffering. The number of those supported by the government is daily diminishing as the freedmen gradually fall into employment, and are thus converted from idle consumers into producers."

THE British emigrants to France have been readmitted to the favor of the French Government. About eight hundred of them have been informed that a pension, varying between one hundred and fifty francs and thirty-five francs a month, according to the rank of the applicants held in the insurrectionary forces, will be vouchsafed them in the future. M. Microslawski has opened fresh lectures on strategy and tactics for the benefit of his countrymen in Paris, and a sort of central committee, claiming to be the national government of Poland, has been also instituted again by the exiles.

THE late Mr. Thackeray had a nose of a most peculiar shape, as may be seen by his portrait. The bridge was very low, and the nostrils extremely well developed. On one occasion, at a party where Douglas Jerrold was present, it was mentioned that Mr. Thackeray's religious opinions were unsettled, and that a lady of his acquaintance was doing her best to convert him to Romanism. "To Romanism?" exclaimed Jerrold. "Let us hope she'll begin with his nose!"

IT seems that religious intolerance still exists in Spain to a degree worthy of the days of the Inquisition. An Englishman who sickened and died of the cholera, in Murcia, was abandoned by everybody during his illness, and after his death was refused burial by the clergy, in the cemetery, while no landholder dared give the corpse ground enough to hide it. At last the remains were packed in straw, and sent to the British Consul at Carthagena.

THE message of President Johnson was looked forward to with so much anxiety and was regarded as of such great international importance by the Canadian people that it was telegraphed complete to the Montreal newspapers, and appeared in full in their issues of the morning following the day of its presentation to Congress. It has been well canvassed by the provincials, and is considered by them an able State paper, and, on the whole, pacific in tone.

TWENTY thousand eight hundred and seventy immigrants landed at New York during the month of November this year, of whom thirteen thousand one hundred and seventy-nine were Germans. From January 1 to November 30 of this year, one hundred and eighty-eight thousand two hundred and four immigrants altogether arrived at New York, seventy two thousand nine hundred and seventy six of them being Germans.

A VIENNESE paper announces that at an early day the use of passports will be abolished throughout Austria. There has been, since 1857, no idea of passports necessary within the empire, and now it is to be dispensed with even at the frontiers. With the new year Saxony abolishes passports, according to a treaty last February with Bavaria, Hanover and Wurtemburg.

THE Orthodox Quakers are likely to divide on the question of establishing Sunday schools. The question is agitating the yearly meeting in Philadelphia, and if the friends of the proposed school prevail, the minority who look upon the act as a departure from the spiritualism of the sect, will withdraw and organize another meeting.

THE St. Albans, Vt., Messenger, says that the excitement along the Canadian border still continues, and mischievous individuals delight in playing upon the fears of our neighbors by manufacturing and circulating terrifying rumors and canards.

THE Secretary of War has addressed a card to each member of Congress, calling his attention to the fact that he has the privilege of nominating from his Congressional district, two persons as applicants for the first and second lieutenants in the regular army, to the end that they may be examined before the board for the position, and if found qualified, appointed at once.

IT was decided in Republican senatorial caucus not to place the names of Senator McDougall, of California, and Saulsbury, of Delaware, on any editorial committee; their names, therefore, do not appear in the official list.

The Cattle Plague in England.

The commission appointed by the British government to inquire into the nature of the cattle plague, and to ascertain the mode of treatment best adapted for the cure of affected animals, and the regulations best adapted to prevent the spread of the disorder, have made a report, dated October 31.

The commissioners consider, first, the outbreak and spread of the disease in England. It was first recognized in that country towards the close of June last, and in all the earlier cases seems to have been directly traceable to purchases made in the Metropolitan Cattle Market. Subsequently Norwich fair, and other country markets became centres of infection, and on the 14th of October it had extended to twenty nine counties in England, two in Wales and sixteen in Scotland, and was still advancing. The statement published by the Veterinary Department of the Privy Council office as to the number of cases of attack, recovery and death are referred to as inadequately representing the extent of the evil, the cases reported "being but a small portion" of those which have actually occurred. The Commissioners notice reports which connect the outbreak with an importation of cattle from Revel and Holland respectively, but forbear to pronounce a decided opinion on the actual origin of the disease. They attach importance, however, to the fact that considerable numbers of cattle come every week into this country from Hungary and Gallicia, countries which lie near the steppe country of Russia in Europe, and are often attacked by the plague.

The Commissioners refer to the mortality among cattle in 1349 and 1480, and are doubtful whether they can be identified with the disease now raging; but they have no doubt as to that which in 1715 made a brief inroad and was promptly repelled, and that which in 1745 renewed the attack, and held its ground until 1757. Each of the two latter mortalities were exactly the same as the present plague.

The Commissioners consider that there can be no doubt whatever that the disease is contagious, nor that the contagion is extraordinarily swift, subtle, and most destructive in its effects. Of the witnesses examined, even those who believe that it was spontaneously generated, have acknowledged that it is contagious. The Commissioners see no reason to question the evidence which has been produced before them, proving that it is the same disease as that which has long been known under the name of the rinderpest (cattle plague) or steppe-murrain.

Part of the Commission dissented from certain recommendations made by their colleagues, and presented separate reports. The majority suggested a stoppage of all movements of cattle in England; the minority object to this.

The statistics show that up to the 21st of October, 1865, a period of rather more than four months from the time when the disease first appeared in Islington, 14,083 animals had been attacked, that of these 6,711 had died, 5,119 had been slaughtered, 707 had recovered, and 1,540 remained under treatment. The estimated number of horned cattle in Great Britain is about seven millions, so that less than one per one thousand of such cattle have died of the disease in four months, or about one per day for every 116,000 head. During the same period of four months, sound and healthy cattle of the average value of (say) £15 15s per head, have been imported from foreign countries at the average rate of 1,000 per day, so that by the operation of the present system, involving careful inspection at the ports of landing, the gain to the country has been 166 sound cattle for each one that died of the disease.
