THE INTENDED FLAG PRESENTATION.
TO GOVERNOR CURTIN.

When drums and fire-crackers rattle,
And patriot hearts feel elate,
We'll gather the trophies of battle
Round him who presides o'er our State.
The tokens of triumph made certain;
The pledges of peace to our land,—
Oh, who would not wish to be Curtin,
By those flags surrounded to stand?
He surely should wear, in that hour,
A gorgeous new suit from the Tower!

"HOBSON'S CHOICE."

A man nam'd Hobson, at one time
Kept a large stable, neat and prime,
Where horses in condition stood,
Waiting for those to hire who could;
And Hobson number'd every stall,
So that each patron who might call
Must take the beast, or go without,
In number next to that last out;
Which led sometimes to short dispute,
Because the next horse wouldn't suit;
And there's the point wherein the fun:
The law was—Hobson's choice, or none.
But well-known HOBSON, of the "STAR,"
No customer's caprice will mar,
But simply aids each one's desire
With his sound judgment in attire.
Assists the buyer with his skill,
Showing what won't suit, and what will,
Tones every garment, knows the shade,
The tout ensemble should pervade;
From the large stock of piece goods shows
Enchanting grades in dainty rows,
And cutting out by measures true,
Displays what skill'd experts can do;
Soon the result of practis'd art,
In bright perfection, glads each heart.
The well-pleased customer soon knows
In future where to buy his Clothes,
And all well-fitted, all rejoice,
That they relied on HOBSON'S CHOICE.

We have all-wool Fancy Cassimere Vests, fine quality, $2 and upwards; all-wool Fancy Cassimere Pants at $5 and upwards. Coats at all prices, making a splendid assortment of Fine Fashionable Clothing, gotten up in the best manner, and selling at extremely low prices.

Our stock of goods for ordered work is being constantly renewed, and all work warranted to give satisfaction.

EVENING BULLETIN.

A VOICE FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

Hon. Hugh McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, in his recent extraordinary speech at Washington, excited the risibles of his audience by making an allusion to Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. He was arguing that the people were silent concerning the great issues of the day during the recess of Congress, and he drew the inference from that silence that they were content with the policy of the President, and that it was their representatives alone who were discontented, captious and harsh. While upon this branch of his subject the Secretary said:

"We did hear a voice from Pennsylvania, I believe, and, perhaps, a response from Massachusetts [Laughter], but the people were silent, if not approving."

"A voice from Pennsylvania and perhaps, a response from Massachusetts!" The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States referring to two great loyal commonwealths, thus flippantly to excite the mirth of a crowd that we will not trust ourselves to characterize! Pennsylvania has been heard from, and Massachusetts has responded during the past five or six years in a way not to be misunderstood and not at all calculated to excite laughter. When the country needed a saviour Pennsylvania was heard from, and Massachusetts responded with majorities for Abraham Lincoln which made the election of that good man and pure patriot a certainty, and which secured for Mr. McCulloch a place upon the treasury ladder that has resulted in his mounting to the topmost round of it. When traitor hands were raised against the old flag, and the loyal men of the North were called to the rescue, lest the nation should perish, Pennsylvania was heard from. The men of Berks and Schuylkill were the first to reach the threatened capital, and to guard it from the approach of the Virginians who doubtless formed a large portion of the crowd that laughed derisively the other night, when the Secretary spoke of Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. The Old Bay State responded at that same crisis by hurrying her Sixth Regiment to the front, and when the men in the ranks of that splendid organization wet the streets of Baltimore with their blood, and made the first vital sacrifice of the war, we greatly doubt whether Mr. McCulloch discovered much cause for laughter in the response that Massachusetts had made to the call of the country. When traitors from a neighboring State destroyed bridges and tore up rails, between Philadelphia and Maryland, severing all communication by land between the loyal North and the beleagured capital, Massachusetts responded by moving her 8th regiment, by sea, to Annapolis, and by the rebuilding of the railroad from that point to the Relay House, re-opened the communication that traitor hands had closed. Mr. McCulloch was in Washington, at that time, as Comptroller of the treasury. We doubt whether this response of Massachusetts moved him to mirth then.

Pennsylvania was heard from all through the great struggle. She was heard from through the nearly or quite 400,000 of her sons who fought in almost every field from Bull Run to Petersburg, and who maintained the glory of the old flag under the lead of Farragut, Porter and Dupont. Pennsylvania was heard from when she hospitably cared for 500,000 Union soldiers at her Refreshment saloons; she was heard from in her hospitals and ambulance system, which gave comfort to the poor fellows who had come home maimed from the hands of men, some of whom laughed so boisterously at the allusion of the Secretary of the Treasury to Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. Pennsylvania was heard from when she organized her Reserves, and gave up to the nation at large her thirteen regiments of stalwart men to bear the brunt of many a hardly contested field, until but 1,500 were left out of 15,000 of as gallant men as ever shouldered a musket or bore a sword. Pennsylvania was heard from when $800,000 was advanced to the nation out of the State treasury to sustain the Union cause; she was heard from when her great Central Fair netted $1,200,000 for the relief and comfort of the "boys in blue" who were in the field and in hospital; she was heard from in the devastation of Chambersburg; she was heard from when under the lead of one of her own sons the tide of battle was rolled back at Gettysburg, and the traitor Lee was seat whirling home to his native Virginia. She was heard from through Meade, Hancock and Reynolds, and a host of her other gallant sons, from the private in the ranks to the major-general.

Pennsylvania has been heard from in the past and she will be again and again heard from in the the future. She has no disposition to allow her ardent patriotism to cool, and no willingness to permit all the huge sacrifices of the war, in blood and treasure, to go for naught. She will be heard from in an indignant protest against betrayed trusts and in a determined stand for the principle that the country shall at least have security for the future, although there may be no indemnity for the past. When Pennsylvania is next heard from we trust her utterances will not be in a tone to excite the mirth of a mob of Southern traitors, and Northern doughfaces and Copperheads.

RE-UNION OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

We learn from St. Louis that the "Old School" Presbyterian General Assembly has, by a large majority, adopted a resolution providing for the appointment of a commission to take measures for re-union with the "New School" body. The commission is to consist of nine ministers and six elders, who are to confer with a similar commission, if appointed, by the "New School" Assembly. In case re-union is deemed desirable and practicable by the joint-commission, a report thereon, embodying measures for re-union is to be presented at the meeting of the "Old School" Assembly in May next. This action indicates a truly fraternal spirit on the part of the body by which it has been taken, and will probably be met in an equally cordial manner by their brethren of the other branch of this influential church.

A HAPPY HOME.

How blest is one who has a home,
With loving wife and children dear:
That greet his coming with a smile,
And run to meet him when a-near.

And when his threshold he has crossed,
To seat him in his old arm chair,
His busy wife unfolds the cloth,
To quick the evening meal prepare.

No dainties grace his frugal board;
No rich conserves, or sauces rare;
No luxuries can they afford,
But still content with humble fare.

Then do not deem their fortune hard,
While plenty reigned their bliss to crown,
Their bread and meat was of the best,
Their Tea, they bought of West & Brown.

"Poor and content, is rich enough,"
So says the adage; you'll agree,
That if they wanted viands rare,
They supped upon the best of TEA.

DO YOU KNOW WEST & BROWN? If you do not, call and make their acquaintance at No. 809 Chestnut street. They keep the best Teas in the market and sell them at the lowest prices.
