CONFIDENCE IN DEMOCRACY.

Mr. Chairman Wallace and his democratic State Central Committee, so far, from being abashed by the official exposure of their past rascalities, are evidently prepared to renew the present campaign by a repetition of the same wretched frauds that gave them their partial success last year. Mr. Wallace is, indeed, bolder this year than last, for he gives orders from the stump now, which he only whispered then through private circulars. In a speech made at Pottsville last week, he urges upon the Democracy to carry on the campaign secretly. In language fitted to the moral character of his hearers, he says to them: "Go to work and don't blow about it. Do it silently. Hold your tongues about what you do." There is some one else in the Democratic party who is weak-kneed. Go at him carefully and fix him. Attend to the men ready to be accommodated.

Now all this would be fair advice in a political campaign if it had no signification beyond what appears on its surface. But it must be read, as it was understood by his hearers, in the light of the damning revelations of the Senate Investigating Committee, which unearthed the coffee-cousins frauds by which Judge Woodward and Judge Sharswood now hold their respective seats. Mr. Wallace counsels them to work and do it again. Bring up the foreign and negro naturalization papers. Pack the "Republican holes" with your batches of manufactured citizens. Do it, and your tongue about what you do. Let Let your men remember that Casey lost his life for my treason, incite the South to fresh attempts at revolution, and I will connive with my Northern friends to obtain the control of this government, and destroy it in the cabinet, as I tried to do in the field."

This is the rebel declaration. Those who are prepared to accept the World as authority may confide in the truthfulness of its paragraph if they choose.

If it is true, as report says, that the Fenian organization in Europe had deliberately plotted the assassination of the Queen of England, while she is in Switzerland, that body has forever forfeited all claims to the respect, support and consideration of honorable and just men. The conception of such a crime reveals a depth of baseness for which adequate expression cannot be found. The consummation of such a deed would satisfy the authors of it: to the execration of their race. These Fenians know, as all the world knows, that this woman is not in any degree responsible for the sufferings of Ireland. If Parliament consented to remove the grievances complained of, she too, would certainly consent. Whatever her faults may be, sincerity and want of sympathy for the wretched cannot be laid to her charge. She has been a good Sovereign, a pure and upright woman, and the bullet that lays her low will only strengthen the hands of Ireland's enemies, and make the name of an Irish patriot the synonym for coward and assassin. If the Fenians desire to retain the respect of the American people, themselves bereaved by the hand of a murderer, they must disavow complicity with this most infamous plot.

The Democracy of Washington are becoming terrible, and if things go on at their present rate, General Grant must cut his holiday short and get back to headquarters. On Thursday evening, a fire-breathing orator, rejoicing in the classic name of McNerhaney declared before a delighted meeting of the faithful that "if the votes of the excluded States were not counted in the Presidential election, he and those who agreed with him, would wade in blood to see them counted." The picture is a dreadful one, and reminds us of nothing by that terrible threat of Der Breitmann:

"Gottsdonner! renschenpah wenonth!
How Brutmann reshked de bash!
O let me ree dat lager beer!
O let me a bihn rush!
Und ich mein sabre sharp und true?
Und ich mein wife horse goot?
To get mein quart of lager blut,
I'd shpill a sea of ploot.
Ging, shage, gloot!
I'd shpill a sea of ploot!"
