Rural Economy.

"The wife of the plough would thrive, if the husband either hold or drive."

Small Stones in Ditches.

To the Editor of the American Agriculturist.—Some agricultural writers recommend filling drains with small stones without any water-duct beneath. I have been practical farmers following those directions. To satisfy myself of the utility of this practice I filled up the end of an open drain the past Winter with small stones raked from gravel that had been spread upon a meadow. They were from the size of a hen's egg to that of a man's fist, and were raked quite clean. According to the theory, they ought to pass water readily.—About a rod was thus filled in. I have carefully observed the condition of the water above and below the stones, immediately after heavy rains, and at times when no rain has fallen for several days. The water is from three to six inches higher above than below the stones; showing that a drain thus filled must always keep the water line several inches nearer the surface than it would be with a free duct.

Of course if the drain had been filled the whole length, instead of a rod near the mouth, the case would have been much worse. The passage of the water is hindered by its friction against the surfaces of so many stones, and by the attraction of dirt from the sides of the ditch.

I am persuaded from this experiment, that it always pays to make a duct of some kind at the bottom of a drain.—The labor is but a little increased, for after the channel is covered with flat stones, the small stones may be tipped from the cart directly into the ditch.—With a passage way beneath, the small stones perform an excellent office in making a larger passage for the water in time of heavy rains, and in furnishing the roots of plants with air and moisture in dry times. If the filling in with small stones retains the water in only three inches of the soil, at the bottom of the drain, the farmer loses a part of his labor. There is so much dead, inert sub-soil over the whole area of his field that would be available if the drainage were properly performed. I would advise to use small stones only over drains and not in them. CONNECTICUT.

Do Potatoes mix in the Hill?

One would suppose that this question had been settled long ago; yet it continues to be asked. We repeat, therefore, that they do not and cannot mix in the hill. Why not? Because it is an invariable law of nature that one variety cannot be crossed with another except through the flower and fruit.—All plants of the same family can be hybridized with each other, if they blossom at the same time. This crossing often takes place naturally, i. e. without the use of any artificial means. The wind often blows the pollen from the stamens of one plant-flower upon the pistils of another, and an intermixture ensues. This is also done by bees and insects, and it may be done by the hand of man. Potatoes can be 'mixed' in this way. But remember that the mixing does not take place between the tubers under ground, but in the blossoms, and subsequent seed balls on the top of the plant. Plant two kinds of potatoes in adjoining rows, and if they blossom at the same time, the pollen of one flower will undoubtedly be carried to the pistils of another. In the Fall, save the seedballs and plant them & your potatoes will be a 'mixed' variety. But if you continue to plant the tuber (the potato itself,) you will get no change of variety.

It is in this way that corn, melons, cucumbers and squashes become mixed with other varieties. The hybridization goes on through the flowers, and appears in the seed, and not in the root. —Amer. Agriculturist.

Destruction of Forests.

Having given our plea, once and again, for the preservation of the forests, we now wish simply to record a confirmation of our views, which we find in one of the daily journals. It appears that a learned Frenchman, M. Brequeril, of Paris, has lately published an elaborate treatise on the influence of forests, treating the subject both historically and scientifically. His conclusions are, in brief: "that the forests act upon the climate of a country as frigorific causes; that they also act as protection against winds, and as a means of preserving living springs; and that they prevent the degradation or wearing away of the mountains. They also act as protection against the communication from place to place of contagious diseases."

The Late Planting of Corn.

No farmer should despair of a good crop, whose seed is not yet in the hill. Corn fails to come up from poor seed, and from too early planting, oftener than from all other causes combined. In places north of this latitude, June 14th is as good as any earlier date. One of the premium corn growers of Connecticut plants uniformly June 6th, or as near that date as possible. He never fails to grow a good crop, and at much less cost than the market price per bushel.

Cure for the Ague.

A gentleman recently from Central America—a great place for shakes—informs us that he has seen many obstinate cases cured by wearing finely pulverized rock salt between the feet and stockings. We cannot vouch for the value of this remedy, but consider it worthy of trial.—Genesee Far.

Ready Made Yeast.—Boil a handful of hops in 2 quarts of water and add 4 large potatoes boiled, mashed, strained. Scald 6 tablespoonfuls of flour in the liquid, adding 1 cup of sugar and 1 cup of salt. When cold add yeast to ferment, thinning the liquid to 1½ quarts. This put in well corked bottles, will keep six weeks in the hottest weather. Dissolve a teaspoonful for each loaf of bread.

Mrs. Gage, in a speech at the recent Kansas convention, told the story of a woman who, having a second husband at a premium, the baby, &c., was transformed finely around, that "a husband was the next best thing about a house to the cooking stove."

A dairyman named McLean has been arrested in Michigan, charged with robbing the U. S. mail.

Elastic Cement Roofing.

THE subscriber is prepared to contract and put on at the shortest notice, W. E. Child & Co's. Patent Fire and Water Proof Elastic Cement Roofing.

It is perfectly Fire and Water proof, and in point of durability is equal, if not superior, to any Metallic Roofing. It can be put on over tin, tar, iron, or shingle roofs, however flat or steep they may be.

In point of resisting the elements of fire and water, nothing has yet been discovered equal to the Elastic Cement.

Those who have used it, have testified that it is the very perfection of Roofing, and that there is no further room for improvement.—No one will now think of putting on shingles, when this Cement can be had for much less money and will outwear four shingle roofs. This Roofing is warranted as represented.

The Elastic Cement is the cheapest and best protection from decay for wood exposed to the weather or dampness of the ground. It is also the best paint for iron, effectually preventing rust, and wherever applied perfectly excludes dampness.

This subscriber has this Cement for sale, in quantities to suit. For further information, apply to GEORGE A. COLE,
