SOME days ago Forepaugh, the showman had an elephant strangled to death, because, the elephant was bad, dangerous, and had killed a number of keepers. The brain was examined by doctors and they declare their belief, that the beast, when bad, was insane.

DISTRESSING railroad accidents are frequent. Last week the list of horrible accidents included the destruction by fire of the Kate Adams on the Missippi river, whereby 35 of 200 people lost their lives. Two days later the destruction of this boat was followed by the burning of the boat John H. Hanna, on the same river on Christmas morning. Of the 100 people on board only 14 escaped. The fire in each boat started among cotton bales.

A Dentist's Mistake.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Dec. 24.—A story has been told here which is likely to lead to the arrest of a dentist of Halifax, this county, and a man named Seelwig, of the same place. Seelwig's wife was afflicted with toothache about ten days ago, and her complaints so annoyed her husband that he threatened to leave her if she did not have her teeth pulled. She consented, and persuaded her husband to accompany her to the dentist's. Before she got into the dentist's chair the woman almost fainted from nervousness, which had the effect of making the husband quite irascible, but with the assistance of the dentist she was placed in the chair, and the man with his forceps commenced the work of extraction.

Mrs. Seelwig could not take an anæsthetic, and when two or three of her teeth had been taken out she pulled violently to escape the dentist's operation. It was necessary to have thirteen teeth removed, and the husband determined not to permit his wife to leave the chair until every one had been taken out. To make the work easier for the dentist the husband held his wife's head and arms so that she could not move, and the work continued until all the teeth had been extracted. By this time the woman was exhausted and unable to rise from the chair. The two men realized that she was in a dangerous condition, and they at once applied restoratives. A physician was summoned and every effort was made to revive the woman, but it was of no avail, and she died two hours later.

Whipped by the White Caps.

CHICAGO, Dec. 27.—A despatch from Martins Ferry, Ohio, says: "At Hopedale, Harrison county, Christmas night, White Caps visited Dr. John Parkhill, a leading physician, and gave him a terrible thrashing. His errand boy had been intoxicated, and the White Caps accused Parkhill of drugging him. Charles Gamble, merchant, hearing they contemplated regulating him, accosted two men who he had reason to believe were members of the organization and threatened to shoot them in case a demonstration was made against him. There is much excitement here and the White Caps will probably be regulated."

The Coming Year.

Superstitious people look forward with some dread to the coming year. It happens that 1889 begins with a total eclipse, which astronomical event has not occurred before on January 1 for over two hundred years, and will not occur again on this date for another three hundred years.

To add to the gravity of the situation from an astrological point of view, there are to be two solar eclipses in 1889. This, while not unprecedented, is still so unusual that, astrologically speaking, there is no telling what may and what may not happen before the fateful year is past.—N. Y. Herald.

His Seventh Wife.

ROCKFORD, Ill., Dec. 23.—Levi D. Fuller left here to-day for his home in Cortland, Le Kalb county, with his seventh wife, a red-headed, matronly-looking woman named Emeline Loomis. Fuller's first wife was Jane Maxwell. A divorce separated them. Alvira Clark was the second wife. She died. Nettie Moore was Fuller's wife three months and then sought and secured a decree of divorce. Fuller's fourth wife was Mrs. Elizabeth Cynthia Davis. One night the woman's former husband crawled into Fuller's bedroom and shot him in the leg. A divorce followed. Nellie Bishop was Fuller's fifth wife. She involved her husband in a stabbing affray, and was then released from the matrimonal yoke by a divorce court. Lotta Ray was Fuller's sixth wife, and she eloped with a brakeman.

Fuller's diary shows this interesting table: Replies to advertisements, 1100; number of photographs exchanged, 400; proposals, 119; accepted, 85; rejected, 34; married, 7; divorced, 4; paid branch of promise damages, 1; married by minister, 1; married by justice, 6; shot at, 1; stabbed, 1; time of game, 25 years.

Fuller was engaged to seven women at one time. The only girl that ever went back on him was Carrie Smith, of Dubuque. Six of his wives were blondes and one was a brunette.

A Fight With a Bear.

CHICAGO, Dec. 22.—A despatch from Watertown, Dakota, says: "Rev. J. W. Stokesbury has received intelligence of a terrible struggle his brother Prof. D. E. Stokesbury had recently with a bear in the mountains of Wyoming in which the professor was probably fatally injured. Prof. Stokesbury is a geologist connected with Prof. Marsh's party. About a week ago while he and an assistant were engaged at a point sixty miles north of Carbon they were overtaken by a band of seven silver-tip bears. Observing them approaching the men sought refuge on a large rock, and being well armed succeeded in despatching four of the bears and wounded a fifth before losing sight of the game in the thicket. Flushed with his success the professor sprang into the brush in pursuit, when he was suddenly confronted by the wounded animal, a monster female. In turning he fell and was at once caught by the bear and given a violent shaking. Dropping him she caught him in the inside of the right leg, above the knee, tearing off the flesh and splintering the bone. She next sprang at his face, but he intercepted the attack with his left arm, which was bitten entirely through. She flew at his side and at one blow broke three ribs. The Professor, who had throughout retained hold of his rifle with his right hand, finally succeeded in giving her a fatal shot in the head. The bear weighed about 700 pounds. Stokesbury will probably die.

Burning a Baby.

This shocking piece was published by the Philadelphia Record a few ago.

A baby was baked in the stove in the ladies' waiting-room at the West Jersey Railroad Depot, in Camden, yesterday. Whether the infant was alive at the time it was thrust into the fiery furnace is not known. The unfortunate babe was so horribly incinerated when its presence in the stove was discovered that it was impossible to determine how long it had been dead.

Mrs. Catharine Hanlon is the attendant in the ladies' apartment at the Camden station. While attending to her duties yesterday Mrs. Hanlon found a bundle of what she supposed to be dirty paper. Without examining into the contents the woman threw the package into the stove and went about her work. Shortly afterward she returned to the stove to look after the fire, and the next instant the ferry hands were startled by a shriek. Mrs. Hanlon had discovered the fully developed body of a child lying in the coals and fast being consumed.

The remains of the infant were taken out and removed to the Morgue. County Physician Iszard made a post-mortem examination, but he was unable to decide whether the child had lived or not. Mrs. Hanlon does not know where the bundle came from. It is supposed that it was left in the waiting-room early yesterday morning.

A Ghost at Sea.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 27—The fine Quebec bark Madura, Captain Bernier, arrived at Belt's warf yesterday, one hundred and ten days from Pisagua, Chilli, with 970 tons of nitrate of soda. She also had on board several sailors who were anxious to go over her side. Captain Bernier, a pleasant Canadian Frenchman, laughed when he told a reporter the circumstances that gave rise to superstition among some of his crew. He related how the vessel left New York, September 23, 1887, with general cargo for Brisbane, Australia, from where she sailed for Newcastle, N. S. W. On November 17, a hazy, rough day, the vessel was suddenly surrounded by thousands of birds. Cap. Bernier regarded this as a phenomena he could not account for. About noon, the cook, a Maltese, named Theuma, went forward to clean some fish, and while at work the roll of the vessel snapped the fastenings of a piece of wood on the weather side. The piece of wood was hurled through the air with such force that, striking Theuma in the head, it cut his skull half in two. One part of his skull went overboard. The man died instantly. He was buried at sea the same evening, and almost simultaneously with the descent of his body into the sea the mayriad of birds disappeared. These facts are recorded in the log of the Madura. From Newcastle the Madura carried coals to Calao, and, proceeding to Pisagua, loaded for Baltimore. The vessel had not been out long when a Norwegian began to complain of seeing a strange man in the forecastle at night when the sailor was in his berth with the watch below. His tales were laughed at because he had never seen the cook, having shipped after the cook's death. But the apparition continued to present itself to the sailor, and the description he gave of his nocturnal visitor agreed with that of the beheaded man, and with its repetition there grew an abiding faith in the minds of others that the ghost of the man accompanied the Madura. This mixture of fear and fright was insufficient when the bostswain, who looks as if he knew neither fear or sentiment, said with bated breath and bulged eyes that he had seen the cook on deck. Whether true or not, it was noticed that the men were afterwards seen more together during their night watch on deck than previous to the discovery of a man on board who was known not to be there in the flesh. Captain Bernier has no faith in the supernatural, but the fear among the men seemed a little out of the ordinary course of things, even to him.

We Must Eat Meat.

"I am disposed to exclude vegetables, said a physician of experience, to a Chicago Herald reporter, "with the exception of cereals and fruit from the diet of nervous persons. Why? First, because animal food is more nutritious to the nervous system and to the body generally than vegetable. It has all the essential elements for the formation of the tissues of the body and is easily digested. It appears to be the natural food of human beings. It seems possible for man to exist on it alone in any climate and continue in a normal condition of health. The first food taken by man—milk—is strictly an animal substance. It contains all the elements necessary to the growth of the human body and to its maintenance in a state of health. This cannot be said of any one article of vegetable food. Then, the nervous system consists largely of fat. This substance must be supplied in some form or other in order that the brain and other nerve structures shall be properly nourished. If a person uses up his brain faster than he makes it he soon becomes nervous and irritable. If he does not assimilate enough food to supply its demands his mind is sure to become weak.

The healthiest and strongest individuals, even, should eat a far greater portion of meat than of vegetable food. Beef should be taken as the standard meat. It answers every purpose of the system. Veal and pork are not as easily digested. Pork, so far as its composition goes, is an excellent food for nervous persons, but it is not readily digested. Yet in the army we used to think nothing was better for the wounded men than bacon. As a rule, salt meat is not adapted to the requirements of the nervous individual, as nutritious juice to a great extent go into the brine.

"The flesh of wild birds is more tender and more readily digested than thal of domestic ones. This is accounted for by the greater amount of exercise they take, thereby renewing their flesh more rapidly and making it younger than that of birds which live a more quiet life. This is a suggestion that might be of benefit to women of sedentary habits who are desirous of prolonging an appearance of youth. Fish of all kinds is good for the nervously inclined. Raw eggs, contrary to general opinion, are not as digestible as those that have been cooked.

"A notion has been prevalent that many persons injure their digestion usually suffer from nervous despepsia. Their stomachs are unable to perform the labor of assimilation. Owing to the deficient nerve power of the individual the food lies in the stomach unacted upon by the gastric juice because there is none or the quantity is insufficient to have any power. Food, instead of helping to renew the body and the nervous system with the rest, undergoes fermentation, and the body and brain it should nourish may starve. The person is in a worse state than if the food had not been taken, for the fermentation generates acids.

"Nervous individiduals may derive all the fat they need from sugar and starch. It is better however for those with weak digestive organs, or whose nerves are in a highly sensitive state, to get it from the animal kingdom than to compel their enfeebled stomachs, intestines and pancreas to create it out of these articles. Good bread, sweet butter and meat are the best foods for the nerves. People troubled with insomia, nervous starting from sleep and sensations of falling can often be cured by limiting themselves to a diet of milk alone for a time. An adult should take a pint for a meal and should take four meals daily. People with weakened nerves require usually a larger quantity of water than those whose brains and nerves are strong. It aids in the digestion of food by making it soluble and seems to have a direct tonic effect. Hot water is relaxing to the stomach.

"With proper eating and drinking we should have fewer broken down, nervous wrecks, and far more vigorous intellect. The present human species cannot eliminate flesh from its food and amount to a row of pins. The fancy that nothing but vegetables should be eaten is apt to overtake everyone somewhere in life. It is due to some disorganization, and usually passes away with the disturbance that created it. This fancy is more apt to assail the young than the middle-aged, and females more frequently than males. A nervous sickly girl of nineteen was put under my care about nine months ago. I found she had imbibed the vegetarian notion and practised it about a year. I limited her diet to so much meat per meal and a small quantity of fruit and bread, with a pint of milk. She doesn't look like the same girl now. All that absurd belief in a strict vegetable diet has left her with her growth of strength and nerve forever."

The Finest Yet.

WE refer to The Russell & Morgan Printing Company's calendar for 1889, a copy of which is now before us.

The calendar consists of twelve sheets (one for each month) of coated board, size 12 x 7½ inches, printed in nine to twelve colors and gold from engraved metal plates costing over $2,000. Each page is entirely different from the others, and all are new and original designs illustrating the origin and use of playing cards, etc.

January opens with the story of the playing card—its birthplace: "Midst austere walls of a convent gray," which is carried through by different representations and descriptions to the end, December showing the "house of cards" and a view of The Russell & Morgan Printing Company's building, the largest playing-card factory on earth.

This is the most elaborate calendar ever produced, and while The Russell & Morgan Company have not forgotten to work in a fair amount advertising pertinent to their business, the calendar itself is a most practical one. The figures are large and plain, and on the back of the December sheet is furnished a full commercial calendar for the years 1889 and 1890, with the consecutive figures so useful to book-keepers and business men who wish to make a "note" of time.

A notice printed on the face of the calendar advises us that sample copies will be mailed to any address upon receipt of twenty-five cents.

A Spider's Telephone,

While a gentleman was watching some spiders last summer it occurred to him to try what affect a tuning fork would have on the insects. He suspected that they would regard the sound just as they are in the habit of regarding the sound made by a fly. And sure enough they did. He selected a large ugly spider that had been feasting on flies for two months. The spider was at one edge of its web. Bounding the fork he touched a thread at the other side of the web and watched the result. Mr spider had the buzzing sound conveyed to him over his telephone wires, but how was he to know on which particular wire the sound was traveling? He ran to the centre of the web very quickly, and felt all around until he touched the thread against the other end of which the fork was sounding: then taking another thread just as a man would take an extra piece of rope, he ran out to the fork and sprang upon it. But he retreated a little way and looked at the fork. He was much puzzled. He had expected to find a buzzing fly. He got on the fork again, and danced with delight. He had caught the sound of the fly and it was music to him.—N. Y. Graphic.

The Population of Mifflintown and Patterson is about 1600, and we would say at least one half are troubled with some affection of the Throat and Lungs, as those complaints are, according to statistics, more numerous than others. We would advise all not to neglect the opportunity to call on their druggist and get a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial size free. Sold by all druggists.

B. Longnecker, of West Fairview, who served six months in the Cumberland county jail for forgery, has been arrested for altering tickets on the Pennsylvania railroad. His method was to buy a ticket to a near-by station for a few cents and then cleverly altar it, making it good for a passage to a distant station. It was neatly done and the fraud was not detected by the conductors nor by the ticket counters, but when the accounts came into the auditor's of fice they did not balance and the fraud was then discovered. The case was put into the hands of the Pennsylvania railroad detective force and they traced the matter, they say, to Longnecker.

When Women Vote.

Won't it be funny when women vote,
If they act as silly as the men?
The barrels of flour they'll have to "tote,"
The wheelbarrows they'll have to trundle then?
Will she pay her bills like a little man,
Or hedge with a pretty pink-hued note?
Will it be a case of catch-as-catch can
When women vote?

Won't it be funny to have it said
Of some political sweet girl bride,
"She's actually gone and shaved her head;
Made a bet on the losing side?"
Will they bet their boots and chewing gum?
And the pretty bonnets on which they dote?
Will we think the millennium has come
When women vote?
