THE LAND OF SWEET SOMETIME.

Over the water we'll sail some day
To the land of Sweet Sometime
And we'll anchor there for a year and a day
In the ripples of gold on the lower bay
In the sunset's rays sublime!

It's over the river in Somedayville,
By the lake of Soon-to-Be,
And Later On is the mighty hill
That rises out of the laughing rill,
The river of Wait and See!

It's always summer—the whole year through
In beautiful sometime land,
There are happy skies that are deep and blue,
There are roses waiting to bloom for you
To blossom at your command!

So out to the breeze let us spread the sail,
Till it beats in a merry rhyme,
And off we'll go in the moonlight pale,
Till we reach the land of the fairy tale
The land of Sweet Sometime!

voice saying: "Flowers, 5 cents a

"That is the girl," he muttered, "she is the picture of Nella."
Why is this man talking in this manner? We shall have to turn back and read the past pages of the history of the present Hon. Frederick Nelson.
Years ago at college, he had for a room-mate a young man about his own age, named Leroy Seymons.
Leroy was a youth of steady habits and good character. T[illegible] soon became [illegible] cause a drifting apart of the two. At an entertainment given by the students they both first met Nella Stanton. Unlucky day! Both met to love. One night in the secrecy of their room they agreed that each should do his best to win, and that neither should interfere with the other.
Nella favored Leroy and when he propo[illegible]d was accepted. When Frederick was told by Leroy that he had been accepted the blow was hard, and nearly stunned him. Then, as he fully realized that Nella, whom he loved nigh unto madness, loved Leroy, his grief and rage knew no bounds.
He accused Leroy of treachery, saying he had not given him fair play. He ended by calling him a traitor to the holy bonds of friendship and saying he never wished to see his face again. Stunned by such treatment, Leroy uttered not a word, but, collecting his things, left the room.
From that day to this Frederick Nelson and Leroy Seymons had not looked into each other's faces. Shortly after Frederick read of the marriage of Leroy and Nella.
All this time Leroy and his young wife were living happily together in a distant city.
One year, two years, passed, and the couple were blessed with a beautiful little daughter, whom they named Erla.
She was the pride of their hearts; all their thoughts and plans were for her alone. One day a cruel blow fell upon the head of Nella. Leroy had been killed! O, the terrible anguish! But she would be brave for her baby girl's sake. After their money was gone Nella hired some cheap rooms and supported herself and Erla by her needle. And now she depended on her daughter for support, as her fragile health prevented her from even this means of support. Meanwhile Frederick had married a refined girl named Lottie Ashley, whom after the first grief and disappointment passed away, he loved. His one desire now was to see his old friend and ask his forgiveness. Instead of boarding the car he retraced his steps and walked to where Erla was standing.
"I will take the whole basket," he said in a business-like tone. Erla could have fallen at his feet for gratitude. She had sold only two bunches all this morning and now to sell the whole basket, and mamma so much needed some little luxury, and now she would have it. Happy tears filled her lustrous eyes, and she said in a tremulous voice: "O, sir, you are so kind!"
Not yet sure as to the correctness of the deal which had taken such possession of him, he asked in a low voice, in which the eagerness was hidden: "What is your name?" "My name is Erla Seymous, sir." This was the chance he had coveted; it was his time. "Erla Seymons!" he ejaculated in a well-feigned surprise; "I used to know a man by the name of Leroy Seymons."
"That was my dear father," replied Erla in a choking voice.
"Where is he now?" he asked in excitement which he could not suppress.
"He is dead, sir." This was, indeed, hard when he thought himself so near his desire.
"And your mother?" he asked, with hesitation.
"She is feeble."

Two years have passed. Mrs. Seymons has regained her health and is living comfortably (thanks to her friend, Frederick Nelson). Erla is a lovely, talented maiden of 20.

THE LASSO AS A DEADLY WEAPON IN A COWBOY DUEL.

How Two Desperadoes Who Were Skilled In Horsemanship and Adepts In Flinging the Lariat Shuffled Off This Mortal Coil.

"I once witnessed a duel with lasso ropes between a Mexican and an American," said Joe Hampton. "It happened about 20 years ago, and it was about as exciting a piece of work as I ever saw. I was foreman at that time for the Seven Up (7 U P) horse ranch in Wyoming, and we were on our way from Sydney, Neb., with a band of mares that had been shipped from the Missouri to Sydney. We had to drive the animals overland to the home ranch.

"Well, I picked up an outfit of men around Sydney, seven Americans and three Mexicans, a tough lot. We started out, and when we got to the Big Cheyenne river, south of the Black Hills, we stopped to let the horses rest for a few days. There was one Mexican, Pedro Gonzales, about the most ill natured and most quarrelsome man I ever saw. He fell out with an American by the name of Dick McAll, an all around bad man. I knew Dick by reputation, and he had a bad record.

"Well, one day at dinner time Dick made some remarks about roping a Greaser down in Texas and hauling him across the prairie until he was worn out. The Mexican answered by saying that man must have been asleep or dead, for you could not rope a live man and do that. Dick jumped to his feet and pulled his gun, and Pedro did the same. I rushed between them and ordered them to put up their guns. The Mexican's black eyes shone like a rattlesnake's when about to strike, but he put the gun back in his belt, and Dick did the same.

"I knew there would be trouble, and how to avoid it was a question not easily solved. I ordered the horse wrangler to fetch up the saddle horses, for I intended to move on that afternoon. The Mexican spoke to Dick, and they walked off to one side and talked in a low tone for a few minutes. When the horses came up, I noticed both men saddled up their best horses.

"They both unwound their lasso ropes and stretched them out side by side. Dick's rope was about 45 feet long and Pedro's about 60 feet. Pedro drew his knife from his belt and cut his rope the exact length of Dick's. Then they coiled up their ropes carefully, and each man led his horse in opposite directions until they were about 100 yards apart. Then they mounted like a flash and rode toward each other.

"I stood holding my horse by the bridle and watched every move. I will never forget the look of hate and murder on the Mexican's face. His lips were apart, showing his white teeth, and a wicked smile seemed to play about his mouth. Dick's jaws were set tight, and a look of mingled fear and rage combined on his savage face.

"They rode slowly toward each other for about 50 yards, watching each other like a couple of caged panthers. Then they made a dash, and both ropes shot out like a streak of lightning. Both men dodged and escaped. In an instant they had gathered up their ropes and begun to circle around and around.

"I could hear the swish of their ropes as they swung them around their heads, each man trying to get some advantage. They charged back and forth, and finally both threw their ropes again. It was a close call for Dick, for the Mexican got his rope over Dick's head, but Dick threw it off before he could pull up the slack.

"In an instant Pedro had gathered up his rope and threw it again and caught Dick around the head and one arm. He drove the spurs into his horse and started across the prairie, but like a flash Dick's hand went to his pistol, and before the Mexican could pull him from his horse Dick sent a bullet through his head, and the Mexican fell to the ground dead.

"But Dick was jerked from his horse with terrible force, for the Mexican had made the end of his rope fast to the saddle horn. The Mexican's horse ran a short distance and then stopped, and before I could get to him one of the other Mexicans had ridden up and emptied his six shooter into Dick's body. He then put spurs to his horse and soon disappeared across the prairie, and that was the last I ever saw of him.

"The other Mexican told me that was the third duel of that kind that Pedro had fought and always got his man."—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

No Birthplace.

A remark made by a 6-year-old boy on a certain occasion was the natural result of confusion in his small mind, but it caused amusement to the bystanders.

The house in which he had first seen the light of day had been torn down to make room for a wider street, and the little boy, holding fast to his father's hand, viewed the ruins with grief and amazement.

"Why, papa!" he cried sorrowfully. "Why, papa, I wasn't born anywhere now, was I?"—Youths' Companion.

Soared Too High.

"Yes, that's Guggenthorp. He made a fortune once by inventing a road scraper."

"What did he do with his money?"

"He sunk it in a skyscraper."—Chicago Tribune.

Robbed the Grave

A startling incident, of which Mr. John Oliver, of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters,' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50c, guaranteed, at M. P. Crawford's Drug Store.

THE ROBISONS IN NEW MEXICO.

The Albuquerque New Mexico Journal lies on our table and contains a great deal of valuable information relative to that far away country, but that which immediately interests the Juniata readers is that there are Juniata people there. The Journal speaks particularly of Dr. L. B. Robison. The doctor is a son of Shellburn Robison, deceased, late of Milford township. The Journal also refers to A. M. Robison, who is well known to all Mifflintown and Patterson people. The Journal says:

"One of the most substantial and highly respected citizens of Grant county is Dr. L. B. Robison. The doctor is a graduate of the medical department of the University of Maryland and came to New Mexico in the early '90s. He immediately chose Pinos Altos as one of the most desirable and healthful locations for residence and here he has lived ever since. In that time he has gained the entire confidence of the people and is everywhere recognized as one of the best physicians in Grant county. He is the company physician and besides has established a large practice in the neighboring districts. Dr. Robison is also a pharmacist of considerable ability and is proprietor of one of the neatest drug stores to be found anywhere.

Two years ago in recognition of his high standing in the community, he was appointed post master of Pinos Altos and, assisted by a younger brother, is giving the most complete satisfaction."

DON'T SHOOT.

"Don't shoot till you know to a certainty what you are shooting at." You've seen the distress a number of times, that was brought by shooting before knowing to a certainty what was to be shot at. And now that the shooting season is near at hand, a word of caution to those who contemplate shooting game may be in place. The best lesson by way of caution is a distressing illustration, and here it is, dated at,

STROUDSBURG, Pa., Aug. 16—Hampton Predmore a well known farmer shot and killed his aged neighbor Godfrey Transue of near Shawnee this county, having mistaken him for a ground-hog as he was lying on the ground.

Transue, who resided on the middle road about two miles from Shawnee, and adjacent to the farm of ex County Commissioner Jacob Transue, went out to shoot ground hogs, a sport he was particularly fond of. Transue walked to the property leased by Hampton Predmore.

Finding traces of a ground hog, he lay down among a lot of high weeds and resting his head on his hand, awaited the arrival of the animal.

In the meantime a son of Hampton Predmore informed his father that he saw something dark moving among the weeds not far from the house, and believed it was a ground-hog. Predmore secured a rifle and crept after the supposed ground-hog. Following the usual custom in hunting the animals, he got within fifty yards or so of the weeds and awaited a chance to shoot.

In a few moments Transue moved his head and Predmore thinking it was a ground-hog fired his rifle.

An examination showed that the bullet had entered the right temple, coming out about an inch above the left ear.
