... of all youth, and the memory linger fondly over in riper years, contributes largely to our stock of happiness, and to the elevation of the moral character. For this reason the condition of the family home, in this country, where every man may have a home, should be raised, till it shall symbolize the best character and pursuits, and the dearest affections and enjoyments of social life.—A. J. Downing.

PICKLING CUCUMBERS.—This is the season when housewives are engaged in putting up the pickles. The following is a receipt for pickling, which is highly commended:

"Put fresh cucumbers, as soon as picked from the vine, into weak brine, boiling hot, and let them remain twenty-four hours. They should then be taken out, put into the vessel in which they are to be kept, and vinegar, boiling hot, poured upon them sufficient to cover. In three days the cucumbers will be fit for use. Pickles prepared in this way are kept an indefinite length of time, and preserve all the freshness of the first pickling by paying proper attention to the vinegar. After standing some days, we now will rise and cover the surface of the vinegar. When the scum appears, the vinegar should immediately be taken off and scalded, the scum skimmed off, and the vinegar poured again upon the pickles. This process should be repeated until no scum appears, which will usually occur before one month expires. The advantage of this method of pickling cucumbers over every other process is that it gives the pickles an agreeable sour, and at the same time preserves them in a sound and healthy state and keeps the vinegar sweet and pure.

☞ A GIANT at Peach Orchard is thus described by the Ohio Cultivator: "About ten days since, when at Cincinnati, we took a ride to visit the peach farm of Mr. J. C. Davis, near Milford, about 16 miles from Cincinnati, and two miles from the little Miami Railroad.

The orchard consists of 160 acres of land, and about 11,000 peach trees of 30 or 40 varieties. The trees were brought from New Jersey, and set out three years ago last spring. They have grown beautifully, and are now finely in bearing; the present crop averaging over a bushel for each tree; so that the proprietor expects to sell about 15,000 bushels of peaches the present season. The assortment embraces a good share of the late varieties, as well as the early and medium, so that the selling period will be prolonged to October.

INDIAN CORN.—It has been proved by experiment, that no substance will bear export life in any climate that does not contain ingredients or less resembling those found in corn, flour and the gluten of wheat. Man has opposed the laws of Providence in endeavoring to make other food, such as potatoes and rice, which are very fit for warm climates, the staple subsistence of our laboring population, instead of encouraging the use of these only as auxiliaries to bread and animal food. For the purpose of diversifying our diet, and so far improving it, potatoes and rice are very valuable, but, as ordinary food they are insufficient for the demands of the active body in a climate such as that of England. In order to sustain the body in any degree of power by such diet, it is necessary to take a very large quantity with much salt; thus an Irishman requires from seven to ten pounds of potatoes per day; and a Hindoo who lives chiefly on rice, consumes a greater weight of it in a day than one of our laboring men usually consumes of food altogether in two days.—The necessity of this large consumption is seen at once in the fact that their food is so deficient in flesh-forming substances. As a race, the Hindoos are feeble and predisposed to diseases not unlike those prevalent among the impoverished inmates of ill-dieted work-houses. Their children are remarkable for the unsightly development of the stomach, and Dr. Budd has shown that they are very subject to diseases of the skin, and to ulceration of the eye, and consequent blindness, just as were the dogs on which Majendie experimented by feeding them on substances that did not contain the proper elements of the blood in sufficient quantities.

☞ Great fortunes have been made in this country by the use of Spinning Jenny—Barnum is now trying to see what he can make with a Singing Jenny.

☞ Everybody ought to know that fruit-stains may be readily removed from linen or cotton simply by immersing the article before being wet in cold, in clear boiling water.

☞ One hundred and twenty dollars has been paid for a hen in Massachusetts, where the poultry fever has been raging for some time. It is called the wild Indian game hen.

OF that hero, who, when an overwhelming force was in full pursuit, and all its followers were urging him to more rapid flight, could deliberate in order to repair a flaw in his horse's harness. Worse hoised with the broken buckle, the distant cries of the Indian increased, but yet, regardless of pursuing foes and target spears, he calmly adjusted the strap, the buckle was made fast, the clasp was forced, the steed was mounted, and like a swooping falcon he had vanished from their view. The broken buckle would have let him down to the Indian and a captive. The timid, delay, set him down to his buzzing companions. The resolute, boldly lifted the same buckle, less precipitancy and the same probable fate. The man who, from his prayer-book waking, bounces off into the business of the day, however good his talents and great his diligence, is only gallopping on a steed harnessed with a broken buckle, and must not marvel if, in his hottest haste, or in his hazardous leap, he be left in ditches in the dust, and though it may occasions him little, he will reach his night's rest without a supper, or in order to be the mate, he

TAKING IT COOLLY.—We [illegible] says, writes a friend of the Knickerbocker, have to be dentists as well as druggists. Our saddle bags are our shops, and the turnkey our daily weapon. A few days ago a fairly young woman called, in great other like hair, and asked me I pulled a tooth. Much with much coolness I told and with less relucta tance I took the sum of two dollars five cents. Her compliments, pleased with the operation said she had a tooth that sometimes ached, and she would like to have it out now. I told her that better wait till it ached again; but she said no; she would have it pulled; and so I took it out. She promised to call soon and bring the pay, as she did not expect to have her tooth drawn when she came, and she was not prepared with the "quarter." So a day or two after, she called and off coin was a dollar; but fortunately I had no change, and she said it made no difference, so I told just take it out in pulling another tooth, which she knew would ache, and she would a great deal rather have them pulled before they had a chance to ache.—So I took out another, and made the charge. Wasn't that good philosophy and wouldn't she make a good dentist?

WOMAN AT A PREMIUM.—A lady writes from San Francisco to her friend in Massachusetts:

"The demand for marriage, she says, is as great as it ever was. The single, coming to the wall where women are properly appreciated. The proportion of males in the territory is five to one of females, and the labor of females is as much needed in change &c., as the region, as the males. There have been more marriages the last few months than in ten years previous in this country. The squaws, before they will go to the gold region make efforts to get white husbands which they seem obtain in the present state of affairs. Father Maraquin, the Catholic priest, has in one case that he married the last month 110 white men to squaws. The consequence is that the poor Indians will soon be left without any class of females from which they can choose—certainly no white woman of whatever condition in society, will marry a white man of some wealth and prominence. Some of the most ugly and shovelly servants here marry traders who have accumulated fortunes in a week.

☞ A sailor being asked if he were allowed to gratify three wishes, what would they be?

'My first wish would be for all the rum in the world.' 'And the next?' 'All the tobacco in the world.' 'Now for the third?' Jack was at a loss, turned his quid with his tongue, and at last answered, 'Why, darn my eyes a little more rum.'

A QUANDARY.—A baker with both arms in dough up to his elbows, and a flea in the lag of his trowsers.

A little girl, one day walking with her mother in a grave yard, reading one after another the praises of those who slept beneath, said: "I wonder where they bury the sinners?"
