Machine for Washing Dishes.—The Scientific American says that Mr. Houghton, of Ogden, New York, has invented a machine for washing dishes—a good move for hotels:

"The dishes are placed in a rack and set upright when it is carried to a vessel containing water and a little soap, and by turning a crank, the dishes on the rack are whirled in great style to remove all the dirt. The unclean water is then drawn off and replaced by clean boiling water, and the crank again turned a few seconds. The dishes are then clean, and can remain in the rack [illegible]"

[illegible] that the present Postmaster [illegible] will recommend, in his report to the President, at the opening of the next session of Congress, a reduction of postage to a uniform rate of two cents. [illegible] is founded on fact. There never was a better time for such a reform. The country is prosperous, [illegible] is good, and [illegible] a firm basis. [illegible] since the last reduction [illegible] enormous, and it would increase to a much greater extent if there was a still further reduction. In fact, we are positive that in a few years at a uniform rate [illegible] the Post Office Department would support itself. The five and ten cent rates have worked like a charm, and there is now a [illegible] of dollars surplus. Let us by all means have two cent postage. It will do more to preserve this Union [illegible]

The Building for the World's Exhibition.

The graceful outlines of the magnificent and unique structure in Hyde Park, intended for the reception of the varied products of the world's industry, now begin to display themselves. Some columns, which a few days since raised to the height of [illegible] feet, show the extreme height to which with the exception of the transept, which will be 108 feet high, the Building will rise. At a uniform length of [illegible] and breadth of 72 feet, the central avenue will stretch from west to east for [illegible] feet, or very nearly one third of a mile. Before such an extended avenue as this, the longest of our cathedral aisles dwindles into mere insignificance. In point of width this beautiful avenue, with its beautiful avenue, with its crystal roof, will be 10 feet wider than London Bridge, and [illegible] feet wider than either Westminster, Waterloo, Blackfriars, or Southwark bridges. It will be more than twice the length of London Bridge, and compared with Waterloo, which is the longest of our bridges, it will be in the proportion of 7 to 5, and more than four-fifths longer than either Blackfriars or Westminster. Each side of this extended avenue will be bounded by columns, placed 24 feet apart, supporting the roof. The visitor entering at the east or west entrance of the building, will proceed down this spacious street, a distance equal to the entire length of London Bridge, when he will find himself just entering the noble transept, with its circular glass roof, the centre of which will be 41 feet higher than the flat portion of the roof. This transept, which will extend to the width of the building from north to south will be rather longer than Burlington Arcade, and of the same width as the central avenue. On the south side, nearly opposite the Prince of Wales' Gate, will be very richly ornamented entrance, with [illegible] of doors. The columns which have already been raised to the height of [illegible] feet are on each side of this transept, and [illegible] massive circular ribs, sixteen in number which are now all completed, are intended to spring from these columns.—The upper side of these ribs are formed after design of the columns upon which they rest; and when complete it will appear as though the roof were supported by iron columns, which after rising perpendicular to the height of 60 feet, gracefully [illegible] themselves into semicircular arches, in order to support the crystal roof.

The building, as our readers are aware, will consist of three stories, the upper ones receding behind the lower. On some parts of the [illegible] and second stories, on the north side of the building, and near the centre, considerable quantity of the [illegible] has been already laid on, and [illegible] as much of the building will be covered in as to render the workmen [illegible] independent of the weather.

To the [illegible], North Star, Renton and Tunkhannock Division Sons of Temperance.

Brothers:—Impressed with the importance [illegible] who may be expected to flow from a Union Meeting or Convocation of the Sons of Temperance, to be held at the Presbyterian church in [illegible] on the evening of the 25th of Dec. 1850, [illegible] an attendance of all, our committee of [illegible] are induced to request of your several Divisions a general attendance, in full Regalia. Assured as we are that this favor, extended to all will meet a hearty response in the bosom of every true Son of Temperance, and will be [illegible] in its results, and have an important influence in elevating the standard of Temperance Reform.

[illegible] speakers are expected from abroad.

Respectfully in L. P. & F.

which will add much to the former neatness of the paper. It is only from the hearty encouragement we have thus far received from every portion of the County, that we have been induced to make this outlay of expense, and it is only by a continued increase of patronage [illegible]

In Dimock, Nov. 16, Mrs. Agnes Young, aged 81.

In Dimock, on the 10th ult., Tina, wife of J. N. Young, aged 42 years. Her many virtues endeared her to her family and friends, who are left to mourn her loss, which we trust is her eternal gain.

[illegible] The following obituary we cheerfully publish at the request of the friends of the deceased. We understood it was sent a month after his death, but by accident did not reach us.—Eds. Dem.

In Dimock, Sept 6, Lewis B. Denison, aged 18 years.

A tribute, to the memory and worth of the amiable, is at all times proper. The subject of this obituary was in the highest degree of this character. He possessed a strong intellect, of a highly sensitive nature, with a strong preponderance in favor of moral worth and virtue. He had no enemies; attributable to his candid, sober bearing towards all; and an ever abiding affection for his kindred and friends.

Thus has passed away one of the brightest ornaments of society; and who shall fill his place?

The sunny days of his sojourn
Have silently passed by;
And tribute tears upon his tomb
In briny moisture lie.

And shall we claim as ours to keep,
Forever on this earth;
Those gems so beautiful and sweet,
Which Heaven alone gave birth?
