sentiments toward Catharine Reiwal, whom his Majesty has appointed to be your wife?"

"Now is the time," said Catharine, in an undertone. "He is relaxing. Say that I inspire you with horror."

"Well, yes," said he, with an effort; "Catharine inspires me——. He had got so far when the drums beat a second time. He suddenly interrupted himself as they beat louder and louder, fell on his knees before her, exclaiming: "I love you Catharine—I love you with all my heart! I adore her, commander—I adore her!" Turning to Catharine, who knew not what to think, he said, in an undertone: "I hate you, never fear: but do not contradict me, or I am dead."

"Very well! exclaimed Keller, at the third beat, as he watched Albert in the act of kissing Catharine's hand. "Sergeant Albert Hosten, does your Catharine reciprocate your sentiments?"

"Yes, commander, she loves me—she loves me to deseperation; but excuse the first moment—she is in reality as delighted as I am. She thanks the king; she thanks you—we both thank you." Again the drums were heard. "Is it not so my good Catharine?" Then, in a low voice—"It is for Ludwig! He is lost if you do not give me your hand."

Catharine was quite distracted at these words; this was the only thing which could shake her determination. If Ludwig was in danger she would do anything to save him. She was silent. The sound of the drums decreased.

"For Ludwig," repeated Albert, emphatically; and poor Catharine could no longer resist, and gave her hand to Albert.

The drum ceased.

"You see, major," cried Albert triumphantly, "she has given me her hand!"

"So much the better! Now, Sergeant Hosten and you Catharine Reiwal, you have only to sign the engagement, which is on the table."

At these words they looked at each other in consternation, for they knew if they signed they could never retract.

"You first, sergeant."

"Yes, major—certainly; I am going—." Then hearing the drums he started, and approached the table. He hesitated, but the drums beat again; he took the pen, then threw it down, and passed his hand across his forehead, in great perplexity. The drums continued to beat. "Shat! shot!" thought he, quickly taking up the pen again, and preparing to sign.

Catharine, who had been eagerly watching his every movement, caught his hand. "Oh! you will not do that, Albert."

"No, never!" cried Albert, recovering himself; "rather die!" Then, after a pause, during which the last beat of the drums grew fainter and fainter, and at last ceased, Keller, who had been attentively observing the scene, now said as he slowly rose—"You have not signed?"

"No, sir," replied Catharine, resolutely. "I will marry no one on this earth but Ludwig."

"No, major," chimed in Albert, in the same tone. "I shall look forward to meeting Charlotte in heaven."

"Well execute your orders," cried Keller to the two soldiers. "Arrest the Sergeant. Forward march! To the court martial, to be instantly judged, and shot as a rebel to the commands of the king."

"Albert!" shrieked Catharine.

"Farewell, Catharine," answered Albert, surrendering his arms to the soldiers, and preparing to follow them. "Be happy with Ludwig and tell Charlotte that I die for her." At these words Catharine sank into a chair in a paroxysm of grief.

But, just as the soldiers were leaving the room with Albert, the sound of drums was again heard. There were cries of "To arms! to arms!"

"What is that?" cried Keller in a tone of astonishment.

Soldiers belonging to the king's escort here entered the apartment, and among them was Ludwig. They were followed by an officer, who announced "His Majesty the King!"

Catharine's eyes suddenly met those of Ludwig. "Ludwig here!" cried she. "What good angel sent you?"

"My company entered the fort at the same time as that of his Majesty; and Charlotte,—

"Charlotte with the king!" exclaimed Albert, scarcely daring to believe his eyes.

"Yes, Charlotte," said the king, advancing, holding the trembling girl by the hand.

Keller bent one knee to the ground, but was immediately raised by the king, who said, "No ceremony here, major; I am here incognito. I bring Charlotte Riewal, in order to convict her of being a little rebel against the commands of his Majesty."

"How is that, sire?"

"About an hour ago I was walking in the fields, like a simple mortal, when I met the goddess of grace, who answers to the name of Charlotte. I considered that in marrying her to a handsome soldier, I should make an admirable couple. You know that this is one of my hobbies. I therefore gave her a letter for you, major, in which, without her knowledge, I charged you to find her a husband."

"I received the letter, sire, but this young girl was the bearer," said he pointing to Catharine.

"Ah! ah! Catharine, the sister of my messenger, she who had the courage to take her place. Another rebel".

"I was ignorant, sire, that I had the honor of carrying an order from your Majesty," said Catharine.

"And if you had known it what would you have done?"

"Well to tell the truth, I should not have delivered it. I should have found some one else—my [illegible], for instance, or my great aunt, who [illegible] sixty Ex. We should have seen if the king would have found some handsome soldiers to marry her."

"Courageous and clever, as they told me—and charming, in fact, as her sister" exclaimed Frederick, kissing her on the forehead. "Kings have the same privilege as old men," continued he. "Imagine my surprise, major, when, about half an hour ago, passing the place where I met Charlotte, I still found, quietly watching her goats, the young girl whom I believed to be already betrothed to a grenadier at Marienburg. She told me all—she asked my pardon," said he, smiling. "But I am angry; I have been relentless, and I have brought the criminal to the fort, where I intend that my commands shall be executed by a regular marriage."

"For pity's sake, sire," entreated Charlotte, looking at Ludwig; "my hand is not free, I am already betrothed. I conjure you to take my sister in my place."

"Always your sister! But it is probably too late. I suppose you have already married Catharine, major, as I commanded."

"Nearly, sire. I have measured mademoselle; above five feet. I have measured my choice soldiers, and chosen one of five feet six inches—Sergeant Hosten—Here he is," said he, pointing to Albert. "But I had to do with two obstinate people. The young girl resisted, the sergeant made wry faces; in short, I was just threatening him with court-martial and discharge of musketry, when your majesty—"

"Discharge of musketry!" exclaimed the king. "Oh, major, that was rather too military."

"The guns were not yet loaded, sire," replied the major, smiling; "it was merely a joke of mine. I know the fair sex."

"And why, Mademoiselle Catharine Reiwal," continued the king, "would you not marry Sergeant Albert Hosten?"

"Because I am betrothed to Sergeant Ludwig Hosten," answered she, boldly.

"That has been her song for the last hour, and I would not believe her," said the major. "A letter was brought me from your majesty—a command to marry the bearer. The bearer was Catharine.—I have not deviated from that; I only attend to the orders. Catharine will marry Albert, unless your majesty gives a counter order."

"Oh, sire, a counter-order, in the name of heaven," implored Ludwig and Albert, kneeling before the king.

"How is it that you do not join in the entreaties, Catharine?" asked the king.

"Because, counter-order or no counter-order, I will marry no one but Ludwig my betrothed."

"Charming, charming!" cried the king, laughing. Then addressing the three young people kneeling at his feet, "Rise, my children. Albert, and Charlotte, stand here," said he, pointing to his right.—When they had done as commanded, he added, "Ludwig and Catharine, stand there," pointing to his left. They obeyed. "Two brothers—handsome grenadiers," said he smiling; "two sisters—superb girls. Now, Major Keller, measure each of the couples."

Keller gravely unsheathed his sword, and proceeded to measure the young people. "Five feet six inches, against five feet one inch and a half; and five feet five inches and a half, against five feet two inches."

"What do you think of that double proportion?" asked the king.

"The two couples are not amiss; but Albert would be more suitable to Catharine," responded the major.

"But! for half an inch!" exclaimed the king. "Besides, Catharine and Ludwig may grow yet. Decidedly, I will give the counter-order, and make two matches instead of one. Of course, I shall hold two hundred golden florins to those I have already given."

"Oh, sire, how can we thank you enough?" cried the four young people at once.

The two couples were united, and thus the cloud, which had so suddenly obscured their bright hopes, was as quickly dispelled, and only caused the sunshine of their happiness to seem the brighter.

United States Senator from Oregon.

Benjamin F. Harding, the newly elected United States Senator from Oregon, is a son of Elisha Harding, who resides just opposite our Borough; where "Frank" as he was called, was reared and educated. To his aged father, friends, and acquaintances here, this honorable distinction bestowed upon him by a people three thousand miles distant, must be peculiarly gratifying.

About fifteen years ago he left the quiet farm house of his father, and entered the office of Hon. R. R. Little, as a student at law. After the usual course of studies he was admitted to the bar. Discoveries of gold in California began to be made about that time. Young Harding joined in the throng of thousands that were attracted to that Eldorado of the West. He subsequently emigrated to Oregon, where his honorable course as a Lawyer, soon made him one of the first, if not the first man in that Territory. He was chosen to fill various places of trust and honor, among which, was that of United States District Attorney. Upon the admission of Oregon as a state, he was elected a member of the State Legislature, of which body he was chosen the speaker. The duties of all his official positions, he discharged with fidelity to the people and honor to himself. In politics, he is an admirer, and was the ardent friend and he lamented Douglas.

If his past course is an index of what his future will be, and he still continues true to the principles of the United States, abolitionism will find in him, one of its most uncompromising enemies; and Wyoming County may, well be proud of the honor of having given the county, Benjamin F. Harding, the United States Senator from Oregon.—Tunkhannock Democrat.

Gen. McClellan's Order.

Gen. McClellan's order to his army, touching the Emancipation Proclamation, which we publish in another column, is a dignified, manly and patriotic document. Though evidently disapproving the proclamation, he, true to a soldier's duty, readily obeys its injunctions, pays his homage to the Constitution of the United States in all its integrity, by declaring that the military is subordinate to the civil authority—thus the hero of fifty battles, like the immortal Jackson, obeys the law; he alone is making law, by the aid and protection of the sword. Glorious example! What a rebuke to those enemies who have been attempting to defame McClellan, by asserting that he seeks military dictatorship.

"The remedy for political errors, if any are committed, is only to be found in the action of the people at the polls." So McClellan tells his army is the Democratic doctrine, in war, or rebellion, or in peace. Jefferson could not have been more diadatically terse or more thoroughly American. All honor to the commander of the "Army of the Potomac," he has made that army the pride of the nation in war, the hope of the people in peace.

"In carrying out all measures of public policy, this army will of course be guided by the same rules of mercy and christianity that have ever controlled its conduct towards the defenceless."

We commend this sentence from McClellan's order to those who wish and hope to see servile insurrection and general confiscation sweep over the defenceless in their homes.

All honor to the magnanimity of the hero and courage of the commander, of the "Army of the Potomac," who can thus speak to that glorious army, whose standard has never been despoiled nor its arms dishonored.

UNION VICTORIES!

GROW "SQUELCHED."

WILMOT REPUDIATED AT HOME!

ABOLITIONISM ABOLISHED!

THE UNION AS IT WAS;
Before abolition, secession, etc., disturbed its harmony.

THE CONSTITUTION AS IT IS;
Enforced and respected, in all sections of the country.

The October elections have resulted gloriously! The result is better than the most sanguine could anticipate. Abolitionism is everywhere rebuked—even in its strongholds it has been brought to the ground; while in all doubtful and conservative districts it has been laid alongside of "John Brown's body" to "moulder in the grave." The attempt to rejoice over the result seems useless, for the success is too great to be measured by celebration.

The returns have been carefully suppressed by the vanquished party, but at the end of a week the truth can no longer be concealed. We will mention some of the changes. Grow has been defeated by a majority of 1,767—a change of nearly 5,000 in two years. The Wilmot candidate for Congress in the Bradford district has been defeated—a great change. The abolition nominee for Congress in the Tioga district has been defeated—another great triumph. The Democrats save all their Congressmen in this State, and gain several districts. Our State ticket is elected—a great change. The Legislature is Democratic, and Wilmot will be turned out of the Senate, and a better man put in—a good change.

Ohio has gone Democratic by a large majority—a great change. The Democrats have gained 7 Congressmen over what was allotted to them. The legislature is Democratic, and Ben Wade must give way for a Democrat—a desirable result.

Indiana has gone Democratic; and a U. S. Senator has been gained.

Now for New Jersey, New York, Illinois, Michigan, and Massachusetts, in November!

☞ When John W. Forney first heard some scattering returns from the election, he called for the singing of the song, "Old John Brown's body lies a mouldering in the grave." Further returns prove that the political body of his abolition party lies with it.

☞ It is seldom that the result of an election pleases both sides; but such was the case last week. The Republican says, "the general aspect of the election is most cheering;" and we not only heartily concur in the opinion, but add, that the SPECIAL aspect is more so.

Coroner's Inquest.

An inquest held before Coroner Halsey on the deceased body of an infant found in the vault of the privy at the Baptist parsonage in this place on the 5th ult., closed the examination of witnesses on Saturday last. The evidence clearly proved to the jury that the infant was the child of Eliza Boomer. Coroner Halsey promises a full account of the matter for publication as soon as his labors as examining Surgeon are completed.

NOTICE TO DRAFTED MEN!

Substitutes between the ages of 18 and 45 will be received for all persons drafted, on presentation of Surgeon's certificate that they are able-bodied men, and if minors, with written consent of parents or guardian; and under recent orders, they will be received as Volunteers for the war, with government bounty if they so desire it.

Oct. 20, 1862. J. S. BENTLEY, Com'r.

Drafted Men can Volunteer.

HARRISBURG, Oct. 17.—Governor Curtin, upon application to the War Department to-day, has been authorized to permit drafted militia to become volunteers, by changing their term of service from nine months to three years. This will doubtless result in the conversion of many drafted militia into volunteers for three years, and is an important move, as it will probably entitle those who change their term of service to bounty, advanced pay, premium, and, in fact, all advantages which volunteers have heretofore enjoyed.

Important to Drafted Persons.

In the orders issued from the war department is the following clause, which it would be well for all Drafted persons and Volunteers to observe:

"As the sudden call for Volunteers and Militia has exhausted the supply of blankets, fit for military purposes in the market, and it will take some time to procure by manufacture or importation a sufficient supply. All citizens who may volunteer or be drafted, are advised to take with them to the rendezvous, if possible, a good stout woolen blanket. The regulation military blanket is 84 by 66 inches, and weighs five pounds. As all clothes, blankets and shoes issued by the United States to its troops are charged at an average cost, and no soldier who furnishes his own blanket is required to draw one; it is to his interest to supply himself, and thereby avoid much discomfort, as it is impossible for the United States to supply all the troops immediately."

The Rebels in Chambersburg.

HARRISBURG, Oct. 14, 1862.

The following additional particulars regarding the late Rebel raid in Pennsylvania have been received:

Mr. Asher Smith, the Cashier of the Chambersburg Bank, was in Chambersburg at the time the Rebels entered that town, and I have obtained the following particulars regarding occurrences that came under his personal observation during the occupancy of the town by the Rebel forces. Mr. Smith was in the Bank about 6 o'clock on the evening of October 10th, attending to some business connected with the institution, and in company with two of the Bank clerks.

While there, the telegraph operator entered, and informed him that the Rebels were advancing on the town by way of Mercersburg. He treated the information as an idle rumor, and proceeded with the business that occupied him. Shortly afterwards two men came running into the town on horseback, and stopping at the bank, told him that the Rebels were within six miles of the town, and advancing upon it. Believing, then, that the news was true, he thought about packing up and making his exit with his family from the town. He proceeded to the balcony of the bank in company with the two clerks, and had scarcely arrived there before about sixteen hundred cavalry came into the town and occupied the streets, filling them completely.

Shortly afterwards, an officer of very fine appearance and splendidly dressed came up and asked him if he was connected with the Bank. He stated he was the Cashier. He was then asked if the gentlemen with him were also connected with the institution (alluding to the two Clerks.) He replied in the affirmative. The officer, whose manner throughout was very polite and considerate, stated that it would be necessary for him to examine the Bank, and immediately stationed guards around it.

On entering the Institution, accompanied by a guard and the cashier and clerks, he asked if any valuables were deposited there. Mr. Smith said there had been, but hearing the Rebels were in the neighborhood, they had all been removed from the town. The officer then asked Mr. Smith if he knew who he was; on being replied to in the negative, he said, "I am Colonel Butler, of South Carolina. I am instructed to make an examination of the bank, and report to General Stuart my success." The guard placed over the bank were all South Carolina troops, belonging to the Hampton Legion. They were all well dressed, and generally speaking fine-looking men. Shortly afterwards Colonel Butler said, "I understood before coming that the money had all been removed, but I hear there are some Government securities still in the bank." He then asked for the keys, which were reluctantly delivered, and the examination proceeded with, Mr. Smith informed him there were no Government securities, and the examination made was of a very slight character. All the doors were opened, and Colonel Butler merely looked in, without making a very minute search.

In one portion of the bank about two hundred dollars in specie was discovered, which the Colonel passed by, remarking that he would not disturb it, and that he would not disturb it, and that he had more than that in his possession at the time.

During the conversation that ensued, and throughout which the Rebel Colonel was very affable and polite, he asked Mr. Smith if he was married. Mr. Smith said he was and intimated that his family was close at hand. Colonel Butler told him his family should not be harmed, and desired him to quiet the fears of any citizens he met with, and desired him to report any misconduct of the troops under his command. After some further conversation the Colonel left the bank.

During the night everything was quiet, and early the next morning the whole party left the town, with about eight hundred horses and two thousand navy pistols, in addition to a vast quantity of clothing, and after committing the outrages on private property that have already been made public.

Serious Affray at Archibald.

The Militia Fire into the Crowd, Killing one Man and a Child and Wounding Several Men and Women.

We have to record a melancholy event that transpired in Blakely township, this county, on Friday last, growing out of the anticipated draft. We find it difficult at this distance from the scene, to gather the correct particulars; but give the following as the best account we could make from the many stories afloat. It is known by many of our readers that a number of persons residing about the mines in the vicinity of the village of Archibald (probably 150 and principally women, the wives of the miners, had steadily resisted the officers who have from time to time been sent among them to make the military enrollment. Things stood in this position until last Friday, when Mr. Roseler, the enrolling officer from Scranton, went there again, accompanied by a military company. They also procured the services of a Catholic priest, who accompanied the enrolling officers, and who explained to the people the importance of obeying the laws and allowing the enrollment to go on. Little or no trouble was encountered, except on the part of a few women in the morning, who were promptly arrested, after which all went on smoothly. The officers proceeded uninterruptedly with their business until night, when a posse of men assembled in the lower part of the village, and a melee commenced between them and the military. The latter fired into the crowd, killing Patrick Gilmartin, a quiet citizen who was standing on his porch seriously wounding a child, and more or less injuring nine 10 or 15 other persons. Four buckshot entered Gilmartin's body, one near the heart, and he died almost instantly. It is said his wife received a buckshot in her leg while endeavoring to lift up the body of her husband.

It is said that stones were thrown at the military before the firing; but whether the assault was sufficient to warrant a promiscuous firing into the crowd may yet be the subject of investigation.

At all events, it is a most unfortunate circumstance. The people who resisted the enrollment in the first place, committed a grievous mistake, from which it could not be expected that other than difficulty would result.—Luzerne Union.

The enrollment has since been taken.
