The Humorist.

A POET LET LOOSE.

A SAD TALE OF TRUE LOVE AND DIRE RETRIBUTION.

IN Herkimer county
There never was seen,
A sweeter young creature
Than Annabel Green.
She was fair as the lillies
And pure as the snow,
And Ichabod Brown
Was sweet Annabel's beau.

But Annabel Green
Thus to Ichabod spoke,
"Should you ever prove false
My poor heart would be broke."
Then he answered, "I hope
To be roasted and eat,
If any Annabel's love
I shall ever forget."

But Ichabod Brown
Proved faithless, and soon
Poor Annabel Green
Was deserted and lone;
Then she wept and she mourned,
And she sobbed and she sighed,
Till her tender heart broke
And she laid down and died.

Then Ichabod Brown
Was never at ease;
He roasted all the way
To the far Southern seas.
And on going ashore
Some savages met him,
They built up a fire
And roasted and eat him.

BAKER'S CAT.

A CALIFORNIA STORY. BY MARK TWAIN.

Whenever Dick Baker, of Deadhorse Gulch, was out of luck and a little downhearted, he would fall to mourning over the loss of a wonderful cat he used to own, (for where women and children are not, men of kindly impulse take up with pets, for they must love something). And he always spoke of the strange sagacity of that cat with the air of a man who believed in his secret heart that there was something human about it—may be even supernatural.

I heard him talking about this animal once. He said, Gentlemen, I used to have a cat here, by the name of Tom Quartz, which you'd a took an interest in, I reckon—most anybody would. I had hint here eight years—and he was the remarkablest cat I ever see. He was a large gray one of the Tom specie, and he had more hard, natural sense than any man in his camp, and a power of dignity: he wouldn't a let the governor of California be familiar with him. He never ketched a rat in his life—peared to be above it. He never cared for nothing but mining. He knowed more about mining, that cat did, than any man I ever see. You couldn't tell him nothing about placer digging—and as for pocket mining, why he was just born for it. He would dig out after me and Jim when we went over the hills prospecting, and he would trot along behind as far as such as five miles, if we went so far. And he had the best judgment about mining ground—why you never see anything like it. When we went to work, he'd scatter a glance around, and if he didn't think much of the indications, he would give a look as much as to say, "well, I'll have to get you to excuse me," and without another word he'd byste his nose into the air and shove for home. But if the ground suited him, he would lay low and keep dark till the first pan was washed, and then he would sidle up and take a look, and if there was about six or seven grains of gold he was satisfied—he didn't want no better prospect that—and then he would lay down on our coats and snore like a steamboat till we'd struck the pocket, and then get up and superintend.

Well, by and by, up comes this quartz excitement. And everybody was into it—everybody was picking and digging instead of shovelling dirt on the hill side—everybody was putting down a shaft instead of scraping the surface. Nothing would do Jim, but we must tackle the ledges, too, and so we did. We commenced putting down a shaft, and Tom Quartz he begin to wonder what in the Dickens it was all about. He hadn't ever seen any mining like that before, and he was all upset, as you may say,—he couldn't come to a right understanding of it no way—it was too many for him. He was down on it, too, you bet you—he was down on it powerful—and always appeared to consider it the cussedest foolishness out. But that cat, you know, he was always agin new fangled arrangements; somehow he could never abide 'em. You know how it is with old habits. But by-and-by Tom Quartz begin to get sort of reconciled a little, though he never could altogether understand that eternal sinking of a shaft and never panning out any mining. At last he got to coming down in the shaft himself, to try to cypher it out. And when he'd got the blues, and feel kind o' scruffy, aggravated and disgusted—knowing as he did that the bills was running up all the time and we wasn't making a cent—he would curl up on a gunny sack in the corner and go to sleep. Well, one day when the shaft was down about eight foot, the rock got so hard that we had to put in a blast—the first blasting we'd ever done since Tom Quartz was born. And then we lit the fuse and clumb out and got off about 50 yards,—and forgot and left Tom Quartz sound asleep on the gunny sack. In about a minute we seen a puff of smoke burst up out of the hole, and then everything let go with an awful crash, and about four millions tons of rocks and dirt and smoke and splinters shot up about a mile and a half into the air, and, by-George! right in the midst of it was old Tom Quartz going end over end, and a snorting and a sneezing, and a clawing and a reaching for things like all possessed. But it wasn't no use, you know. It wasn't no use. And that was the last we seed of him for about two minutes and a half, and then all of a sudden it begin to rain rocks and rubbage, and directly he come down ker-whop about ten foot off from where we stood. Well, I reckon he was p'raps the ornerest-looking beast you ever see. His tail was set back on his neck, and his tuft was stuck up, and his eyewinkers was singed off, and he was all blacked up with powder and smoke and all sloppy with mud and slush from one end to the other. Well, sir, it warn't no use to try to apologize—we couldn't say a word. He took a sort of a disgusted look at himself, and then he looked at us—and he looked exactly the same as if he had said—"Gents, may be you think it's smart to take advantage of a cat that ain't had no experience of quartz mining, but I think different"—and then he turned on his heel and marched off home without ever saying another word.

That was just his style. And may be you won't believe it, but after that you never see a cat so prejudiced agin quartz mining as what he was. And by-and-by when he did get to going down the shaft agin, you'd a been astonished at his sagacity. The minute we'd touch off a blast and the fuse'd begin to sizzle, he'd give a look as much as to say: Well I'll have to get you to excuse me," and it was surprising, the way he'd shin out of that hole and go for a tree.

Sagacity? Itain't no name for it. 'Twas inspiration!

I said, "Well, Mr. Baker, this prejudice against quartz mining was remarkable, considering how he came by it. Couldn't you ever cure him of it?"

"Cure him! No! When Tom Quartz was not once, he was always set—and you might a blowed him up as much as three million times and you'd never a broke him of his cussed prejudice agin quartz mining."

The affection and the pride that lit up Baker's face when he delivered this tribute to the firmness of his humble friend of other days, will always be vivid memory with me.

CRAWLED IN.—Once upon a time a gentleman found in his hen-roost a simpleminded soul of the vicinity, who lived without visible means of support.

"What are you doing here, you rascal? Stealing my chickens?"

"No, sir," was the response; "I ain't thought of doin 'nothin' of the sort."

It unfortunately happened that the simpleminded individual wore a high, straw hat, of the dimensions of a bee-hive, and the crown thereof was dilapidated to a serious extent. Just as he had put in his denial, the head of a half-grown pullet was seen to protrude from the aperture.

"See there," said the gentleman; how did that chicken get in your hat?"

"Well!" exclaimed the simple-minded individual, with an air of honest surprise and embarrassment, "that it is the strangest thing that ever happened to me. I suppose the darned critter must have crawled up my trowsers leg!"

By these means the maximum useful effect of the power is secured with the least expense for attendance, cost of fuel, and repairs to Road and Engine. With these objects in view, and as the result of twenty-three years practical experience in the business by our senior partner, we manufacture five different kinds of Engines, and several classes of sizes of each kind. Particular attention paid to the strength of the machine in the plan and workmanship of all the details. Our long experience and opportunities of obtaining the best materials, enable us to offer these engines with the assurance that in endurance, economy and durability they will compare favorably with those of any other third class locomotives. We also furnish to order, when desired, Patterns of the best form of centres, spokes and felloes for wood wheels, castings for bearings of wheels, axle boxes, Sand Boxes, Sand Iron and Boiler Works; and render assistance pertaining to the repair or renewal of Locomotive Engines.

IMPROVED PATENT COAL SLATER.

The above cut is an improvement on I. P. Garner's Patent of 1867 (mantrap as the grooves are continuous around the surface, with a flanged or flanged Roller and Stock working in it, to keep it square, and prevent the coal rolling out of the slater. It screws on the end of the roll, and is worked out by one man, and will do the work of three in breaking coal much faster than any other slater now in use. Also, the celebrated WILLIAM POINT, which can be placed on any roll, improved in the Slater. No danger of coal being broken by the operation. Also, the celebrated STRAIGHT BAR, for attached to Jaw Breaker, Roll Slater, Gang Slater or any other engine now in use.

Also, Coal Screens, Screw Augers, and all kinds of Castings, Pulleys and Gearing, for sale at our Works, in Mahanoy City.
