

The Suez Canal.

Why people should expect this canal to be different from canals in general, I do not know; but I have never yet met a man that had seen it who did not express his astonishment at finding it "just like" any other canal of the world. The splendid triumph which it received in November, 1869, with all the Kings and Princes of the earth for its sponsors, have cast a glamour over it, making it appear more wonderful than it really is. But as you gradually become familiar with the utter barrenness of the country, void alike of food and shelter, the pomp and circumstance of the canal, which runs like threads in the canal from either bank, necessitating the constant working of dredgers to keep the passage clear—the meretricious heat, striking us heavily even in April—the furious squalls of wind and rain, (one of which swept us all to the skin, provoking our Captain to observe sarcastically that "these book-learned folks what says it don't rain in Egypt, had ought to come here and try")—as you realize all this, you begin to admire, in your own despite, this little ribbon of light-green water, twenty-six and a half feet in depth, by seventy to one hundred feet broad, drawn against the dull brassy yellow of the everlasting desert—the enterprise which, begun by an Egyptian King nearly thirty centuries ago, has received its completion in our own day from the hand of a French engineer.

The Camel and the Leech.

Modern research has determined a curious circumstance of an organic connection in the camel and the leech, and as they are in structure, functions and habits, which has reference to supplying them with food from storehouses in their own bodies till supplies are attainable from other sources. The leech has an immense collection of fat in reticulated cells piled one upon another, which is concentrated food. When food cannot be had, as frequently occurs on their long caravan travels in the desert, a peculiar set of absorbent vessels draw upon the magazine—the hump—carrying the fat into circulation till food from without puts a stop to the draft on the back. The hump is very sensibly diminished at times, even being almost completely leveled, but that which was so borrowed to sustain life temporarily is immediately replaced when the stomach is set in motion again in its accustomed manner. The medical leech or blood-sucker is as it is in the organic scale of life, is as carefully provided for in regard to the contingencies of life as the king of the country. As the blood passes down the gulley of the leech, the current divides right and left to enter two lateral tubes, instead of entering directly into the stomach. These canals are folded zig-zag, backwards and forwards in loops, as it were, from the head to the tail. When perfectly filled, the leech lets go its hold. It is then plump and full, with a stock of food on hand that may last from one to two years, in case it has no opportunity to take another in that long time.

The Lake Champlain Bridge.

The trestle work of the new railroad bridge across Lake Champlain is eighteen hundred feet long, and it is intended to carry one hundred feet of building piers thirty feet square at the bottom, and twelve feet by thirty at the top. The rest to be used as drawbridge is three hundred feet long, thirty wide, and twelve feet high, contains two hundred and fifty thousand feet of lumber, weighs about three hundred tons, and is expected to draw two feet of water. Eight hundred piles, length eighty feet, were required to build the trestle work from either shore to the draw; this latter is to be connected to a pier by hinges, and swings back and forth like a door, by means of a chain running to the pier, and operated by a twelve-horse engine. The contract price for the whole structure, including the boat landing, is $260,000, but will probably exceed that sum.

A Good Word for Bridget.

My dear Madam.—I might agree with you entirely, that servant girls are a nuisance; that they have followers, that they spend their money for show, and that they gad about the streets just as often as they can steal away; that they will have forbidden shindies in your kitchen, and flick you with sugar by the pound. You cannot possibly prevail upon them to tidy up their room; they inevitably stay out till midnight, when you positively limit them to ten o'clock; you may be sure of impudence unlimited to your very face, and gossip in abundance behind your back; and truth is as foreign to their tongues as tatters or tawdriness is essential to their dress. And then, when, as you truly say, you have given them a home for years and years, and treated them as kindly as you know how, off they go at three days' notice, make fools of themselves by getting married, and take in washing—and yourself. And, in short, to quote your own words, and sugar by the pound, you really cannot trust them out of sight. But, my dear madam, who is to blame? If Amanda, up stairs, with pale, spiriue face, and delicate, do-nothing hands, is to spend all her time and educated brilliancy in catching a husband, and spending for him her annual ten thousand, why is down-stairs Bridget, with ruddy, healthy face, and unceasing working man, to be debased from joining her honest heart and helpful hands to some piece of masculinity more useful, after all, than many an Amadeus of the parlor? If Dulcinea and Floribel and Lillan are to do this and so in their way, why not Mary and Ann and Margaret in theirs? Your astonished eyes open very wide.

Salmon Traps in France.

To some it may be a mystery how the eggs of fish are procured to carry on the system of stocking rivers, which has of late years been largely practiced. At the spawning season the male salmon ascends the river first, as if to prepare a spawning ground. Acting on this, the fisherman secures a male salmon, and, muzzling it, fastens it by a thread to a stone, which he sinks near a spot that he prepares, as near as his experience will enable him, in imitation of the spawning ground.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

CELERY FOR WINTER.

The method now in general use among market gardeners around New-York for storing celery for winter use is cheap, simple, and safe. When this method is practiced there is a much less percentage of loss from rotting than by any of the old-fashioned modes.

The time of digging celery depends on the weather. Light frosts will not injure the stalks, and it may be left growing until such time as there are indications of severe cold. Freezing weather will check the growth and "harden" the stalks. Yet, if celery is stored too early in the season, while the stalks are succulent and soft, and there should be a week or two of very mild, soft weather, it is not likely that it would keep well. At our farm, we begin to store celery at any time from the 1st to the 20th of November, and often as late as the first week in December.

As a rule, we always begin with the scale of the crop that is not "banked," for where celery is well "banked," it is comparatively safe against a hard "black" frost, when the surface is not frozen more than an inch deep.

To make the trenches we select a spot where there is fall enough to cast the water. The trench is made with a spade 10 inches wide, and from 12 to 20 inches deep, according to the length of the celery. When the stalks are placed in an upright position in the trench, the tops of the celery should not be more than a few inches above the level of the surface, and it is better to have them an inch below instead of an inch above the surface.

The bottom of such a trench should be made so that the water will find its way to the lower end, where there should be an outlet, provided the ground is tenacious.

Before digging, the soil is taken away from either side of the row by digging-forks, spades, or, when the crop is large, by a one-horse plow. The stalks are then dug up, leaving considerable earth attached to the roots. Instead of digging-forks for this purpose, we use a one-horse lifting subsoil plow, that runs along the side of each row, loosening every stock. A man follows, pulling up the stalks, throwing them in small heaps. The roots all come up in the line of the row, being very careful not to break any of the leaves, either while digging or putting in the trenches. The celery should then be carried to the edge and packed at once. Beginning at the upper end, stand the stalks in an upright position and as close together as it will stand. Continue this way until the trench is filled. It may be set in this way for two or three weeks, or until such time as very cold weather is expected to set in. Then some loose earth from either side of the celery in the trench may be pressed down along side, and some earth drawn up toward the line of the row, making a convex surface along the line of the row, so that the manure—salt hay or straw—should be spread on the top of this filled trench, so as to protect the tops of the celery from freezing. By nailing two boards together in the shape of the letter A, and placing this on top of the celery row, it makes one of the best kind of coverings for this purpose.

Celery stored in the way described can be safely taken from the trenches at any time, and the stalks will keep well, provided the weather may be; for by removing a small quantity of earth from the front, celery can be taken out. It is well to remember that celery, to keep well, should be dug and stored in dry weather. If packed away in this or any other kind of trench while the stalks are wet, they will very likely follow, and the percentage of loss will be large. Put in these trenches as soon as the stalks will bleach and be ready for the table very much sooner than it allowed to lie in heaps and will be better packed away.—N. Y. Tribune.

A NEW METHOD OF PACKING BUTTER.

A Michigan dairyman has lately published his method of packing butter. He has taken tubes, with heads at each end. They are 14 inches in diameter at top, 9 inches at the bottom, and 16 inches high. In packing, a cambric bag is made to fit the tube. The butter is packed in the wrapper, no matter how inclined the weather may be; for by removing a small quantity of earth from the front, celery can be taken out. It is well to remember that celery, to keep well, should be dug and stored in dry weather. If packed away in this or any other kind of trench while the stalks are wet, they will very likely follow, and the percentage of loss will be large. Put in these trenches as soon as the stalks will bleach and be ready for the table very much sooner than it allowed to lie in heaps and will be better packed away.—N. Y. Tribune.

A LIFE-RENEWING FOUNTAIN.

If a life-renewing fountain, like that sought for by DeSoto, should burst from the earth at every man's door, thousands would turn their backs on the healing springs within arms-reach to other pretended remedies. The observer, everywhere, except Dr. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS as the greatest medicinal blessing of modern times, but on the other hand multitudes dose themselves with poisons, while this well-spring of health is accessible to all. It purifies the animal fluids, regulates every function of the body, calms the nerves, brightens the vital organs, and is an unalloyed specific for indigestion.

A CASE OF CHRONIC RHEUMATISM.

A case of chronic rheumatism of unusual severity, cured by "Johnson's Anodyne Liniment," is noticed by one of our exchanges. A large bunch came out upon the breast of the sufferer, and appeared like part of the breast bone.

PHYSICIANS ARE AMAZED.

Patients delighted, the doubtful benighted, and all who have eyes to see, or ears to hear, more than strive to get Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. It is used in all cases of rheumatism, neuralgia, and other painful affections, and is more convenient and easily applied than other remedies, avoiding the trouble of the greasy compounds now in use.

Sudden Changes in the Weather.

Sudden changes in the weather are productive of various diseases, Coughs and Colds. There is no more effectual relief to be found, than in the use of "Brown's Bronchial Troches."

A Legitimate Enterprise.

By the prospectus of the Grand Distribution to take place at Washington on November 23rd, for the benefit of the New York Foundling Asylum, and the Soldiers and Sailors Orphans' Home of Washington, D. C., it will be seen that the enterprise possesses certain unique features which have already commended it to the confidence of the public. Among these an important one is the fact of its being endorsed by the U. S. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose special permit is extended for the first time to a enterprise of the kind in question. This permit, in fact, is a guarantee for the character of the enterprise, and may be set down as one of the reasons of its popularity with which tickets for the distribution have already been sold. The voice of the press throughout the country has been earnestly in favor of the enterprise; another great feature of the enterprise is the genuine character of it, which is likewise apparent in the names of the parties interested in carrying it out. And it is to be understood that the persons interested—for the most part leading bankers and merchants—are actuated by no selfish motives of gain in this giving their support to the cause, but are simply a legitimate one for the benefit of the object set forth in the prospectus.

LABOR.

"Labor," says the R. V. Newman Hall, "is a mighty magician, walks forth into a region uninhabited and waste; he looks earnestly on the scenery as he goes, and the clouds are driven away by his working wand, those dreary valleys smile with golden harvests—those barren mountain slopes are clothed with foliage—the furnace blasts—the anvils ring—the busy wheels whirl round—the town appears—the market of commerce, the hall of science, the temple of religion, its high, lofty front—a forest of masts, gay with varied pennons, rises from the harbor—the quays are crowded with commercial spolia, the peaceful spots which enrich both him who receives and him who yields—representatives of far off regions make it their resort—science enlists the elements of earth and heaven in its service—art, awaking, cloven by the lightning of beauty—literature, new born, redoubles and pur-pur-tits praise—civilization smiles—liberty is glad—humanity rejoices—exults, for the voice of industry and gladness is heard on every hand; and who contemplating such results, will deny that there is dignity in labor?"
