VOLUME XII. PITTSBURGH, THURSDAY, JANUARY 19, 1854. NUMBER 146.

DAILY MORNING POST.

THURSDAY MORNING:.....JANUARY 19.

From the Baltimore Sun.

Further Particulars of the Loss of the Steamship San Francisco.

We announced yesterday the safe arrival at New York of the unfortunate passengers of the ill-fated steamship San Francisco, who were rescued by the bark Kilby, and subsequently transferred to the packet ship Lucy Thompson. A passenger on the Kilby, who pays a high tribute to Capt. Low, her commander, for his noble efforts to save the passengers, he being himself short of provisions and in a disabled condition, thus shows how they fared during the two weeks they were on board.

"Our beds on board the Kilby were cotton and cotton bales, and our daily allowance a sea biscuit, a small piece of fried ham, and a pint of water, until at length we broke into the cargo, and corn was added to our provender. Not having water enough to boil the corn, we resorted to parching it, and this parched corn had been our food for seven days, when, to our infinite joy, the Lucy Thompson, Capt. C. B. Pendleton, hove in sight, and took us on board."

Frederick H. Southworth, Esq., another of her passengers, states that the thirteen soldiers remaining on board the Kilby, volunteered to stay, in order to work the pumps and keep her afloat; and also, that Mrs. Major Wyse might have come off, but that she was so nervous from exhaustion she would not venture to trust herself down the side. The Kilby was 68 days from New Orleans, via Bermuda, when she fell in with the San Francisco.

MR. SOUTHWORTH'S STATEMENT.

Frederick H. Southworth, Esq., who was washed overboard at the time so many souls found a watery grave, thus describes the frightful scene:

Myself and Mr. Rankin were among the number who were washed away, and the only two of this entire company who were successful in regaining the ship. All the rest sunk into the jaws of death, and were rocked into an eternal sleep by the roaring, swelling sea. As I can only describe the awful situation of these mortals by my own experience, I hope I will be excused for alluding to myself. I well remember I was lying in my stateroom on the after deck, with a traveling companion, Mr. James Stockwell, when there came a shock and sudden crash of breaking timber, and I felt myself rolling like a top in the water, with salt brine rushing into my mouth and almost blinding me. When I arose to the surface, a harrowing sight was before me. I was half a mile from the steamer, and around me was about an acre of floating timber. Immediately by my side came up from the deep, Mr. Stockwell, who caught hold of the same stick of timber to which I had clung for safety. The stick began to sink, and I seized hold of another piece, and made the best of my way to the wrecked steamer. Two or three huge swells soon tossed me near the ship; I grasped a rope forward of the wheelhouse, to which I clung for refuge, raising and falling with the pitching vessel. While in this situation I saw a man standing or the paddle of the wheel who was plunged into the ocean at every roll of the steamer, and who probably perished. Losing my strength, I dropped from the rope to which I clung, and fortunately a friendly wave threw me against the guard of the vessel, which I seized hold of, and the next plunge carrying me still higher on the guard, I was enabled at last to crawl upon the forward deck, and there with my hand broke open a state-room window and crept into it half drowned.

While in the water, the sight around me was worse than death itself. When I rose to the surface of the water, I saw about forty struggling for life, and about one-half of them had blood streaming from wounds about their heads. Being blinded by what I thought was the salt water, I put my hand to my forehead to wipe away the urine, when I was surprised to find I was bleeding myself from a wound on my brow. It is, therefore, conclusive that most of those washed away were at the same time wounded, by the crashing timbers. Besides myself, Mr. Rankin was the only one saved of the numbers who were swept into the ocean.

Such was the force of the waves that they broke in a part of the deck, and killed and injured several, besides delaying the passengers in the lower cabins, and filling the saloons with water. Capt. W. F. Gardiner, First U. S. Dragoons, slept on deck, and was not swept away with the others, but at one time found a man by his side, with a splinter thrust through his head, which must have killed him instantaneously.

Subsequently, and every day until they were rescued, the Rev. Mr. Cooper, an Episcopal clergyman, assembled the passengers in the lower cabin, and offered up fervent prayers for their deliverance. Mr. Southworth bears testimony to the strength of the steamer, and thinks that no vessel, not built of oak and iron, well put together, could have swum an hour in such a gale. He adds, however:

"The bulwarks and guards were too astrong as they might have been, and perhaps to this we owe our lives. Had the guards and after-cabin been of iron strength, and not yielded to the wave, such was its force that it would have overturned the ship, and not a single soul would have been left to tell the awful tale."

DESTITUTE OFFICERS AND MEN.

Brevet Major Wyse and command lost everything, (their six months' pay and supplies,) and are now destitute. The loss of clothing to the soldiers, it is said, will be made good by the Navy Department, and their six months' pay will probably be refunded by Congress. The Secretary of War has written to Capt. Watkins, of the San Francisco, at Liverpool, requesting him to make provisions for the comfort of the officers and soldiers of the army who went off in the Arctic, and to take such measures as he deems best to bring them promptly back to the United States.

The companies which have been depleted by this disaster will be immediately filled up by new recruits, and sent out to the Pacific, probably by the way of Panama, as so much time has already been lost by the disaster.

Gen. Wool will sail for California on the 20th, as anticipated. It is possible that two companies of infantry may go out with him, but it is not probable that they can be got ready in time.

There are still in California and Oregon the 4th Infantry, three companies of Dragoons, and three of Artillery, which must comprise our whole Pacific force until more troops can be sent.

THE LOST OFFICERS.

Col. Washington leaves a wife and children, understood to be now in Alexandria. Maj. Taylor leaves no children. Lieut. R. H. Smith was married a few years ago in New London, but his wife remained at home on account of delicate health. Major Merchant (saved,) has all his family on board, except two sons, one of whom is in the Naval School at Annapolis, and the other in California; but they are all reported saved. The family with him consisted of a widowed daughter and child, and three other daughters. Maj. Taylor and Lieut. Smith have for several years past been stationed at New London.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE OVER LICKING FALLEN.—This beautiful structure, uniting the cities of Covington and Newport, just erected at a cost of $80,000, suddenly gave way about 5 o'clock yesterday evening, and tumbled into the river, a shapeless wreck. The accident was occasioned by the breaking of the "keys"—i. e. the snapping of the iron rods connecting the cables with the "anchorage." This occurred on the Newport side, at the moment that a drove of nineteen cattle were on the structure near the center. The cattle were driven by Mr. Joseph Mollridge, who doubling the security of the bridge, stood at a little distance and watching his cattle, saw them take the dizzy plunge amid crashing timber and iron into the icy river. Thirteen of the cattle managed to get out, the rest are supposed to have been killed by the fall, or drowned.

Two men on horseback had just entered from the Covington side, and fell into the river, but singular to relate, escaped without dangerous injury. One of their horses got out; the other was killed. The names of the men who made this narrow escape were Henry Clarcom and Taylor Keys.

The bridge only a few days ago was taken off the hands of the contractors by the towns, and a toll gate established. We understand that its capacity of existence was never tested before the job was taken from the contractors, a neglect that is quite unpardonable.—Cin. Commercial.
