A GOLD HOUSE.—The Norway Advertiser publishes at the village of Norway, Maine, on the 8th inst. that considerable excitement was created in that village last week by the rumor that native gold had been found in large quantities, right in the very heart of the town. Specimens were produced, examined and tested by those supposed to be competent judges, and pronounced to be the genuine "stuff." Some 20 pounds, avoirdupois, were secured by the boys who made the discovery, who, no doubt, were "rich enough," without going to California to make their fortune, when an unlucky searcher in the newly discovered "placer" accidentally turned up the "ear of an old brass kettle, which had been partly fused by the action of heat, presenting precisely the same appearance of that of the specimens. Operations in the stock ceased at once—it went down to "less than nothing"—bustle in the air came tumbling down about the heads of the architects—fortunes made by operations in the yellow metal," prospectively, were dissipated into thin air, and every one was as calm as though it had all been a dream. It appears that the "stuff" was some pot metal, melted down in a great fire which occurred in the village in 1851.

Therefore, we invite the attention of purchasers of wholesale dealers and country merchants, in general, to call at our store, and examine our extensive assortment of READY MADE CLOTHING.
