FUGITIVE SLAVE KILLED BY A LOCOMOTIVE.—A negro, who was walking the track of the Central Railroad, was instantly killed two miles west of Port Byron, between five and six o'clock last evening. The New York express train was coming west. Soon after leaving Port Byron, Mr. Hoffman, the engineer, saw a man walking on the track. The snow was falling so thickly, that he could not see far ahead, and the glimpse he had of the man was obtained when the snow-squall slackened for an instant. He blew the whistle, and the next instant, as it were, the pilot struck something with great violence, throwing it far away. When the train stopped, the pilot was covered with the blood and brains of a human being, and the lifeless and shocking-ly-mangled body of the black man was found, where it had been thrown by the engine, beside the track. All we know of the man is what the station-men at Port Byron say of him, and that he was a fugitive slave, travelling from the South toward Canada. There cannot be the least blame imputed to the engineer, who is one of the oldest and most cautious men in the employ of the Central company.—Rochester Advertiser, 17th inst.

When the smacks left her she was in about the same position as when the Eagle's Wing left her on Monday morning, with one bilge cut a bottom and the other at the surface of the water. Wreckers have demanded her, after having stripped her of sails, rigging, and anchor, and what spars they could get. The Eagle's Wing went down to her on Tuesday evening; will attempt to get her off; but don't attempt to do any thing.

The weather still looking bad, got ready for getting to sea At 11 P M 21st, the wind struck in a squall from SW, which made it impossible to get off. At 2 o'clock, the gale increasing, got the stream anchor and the kedge and hawser to windward, which with both bowers, succeeded in holding on till 8 P M of 22d when, with the assistance of extra men from shore, got under way and proceeded to sea, slipping the stream anchor and kedge, which were lost. In ten minutes after getting under sail lost fore topsail, jib, and spanker; ship very crank, being lightly ballasted. After clearing the reef, hove to under close reefed main topsail, and drifted 150 miles to NE. After being absent five days, returned to the island and finished loading.
