The Timber Supply.

The rapid decrease of the timber supply of the country is beginning to attract general attention. It has been stated by port or Eric. Call while the assortment some who have paid particular attention to the subject that within thirty years place at Blakely's, on Centre street, St. the "entire available timber land of this Mary's. country will have been cut over and rendered practically useless for supplying the constant drain upon it." It is hard to say (observes the Buffalo Express) how much truth there is in this statement, but considering the fact that the consumption of lumber is increasing enormously every year, while the stock is rapidly diminishing, it is certain that the supply will at least be greatly restricted in a very few years. Last year over 6,000,000,000 feet of lumber was produced in the United States. Thousands of acres of forest land are cut over every season, and a large proportion of such land is then cleared for cultivation. The Western praries, which are gradually being covered with villages and cities. are almost destitute of forest trees. The people of those towns must draw their supply of wood from the sources which the Eastern States and foreign countries are already draining. The Michigan timber lands are being swept bare at a rapid rate, under this growing demand from all quarters, and the same may be said of the Maine and Canadian timber districts. The forests of this country have long seemed almost illimitable. Trees have been regarded by the setlers as obstacles of cultivation, and therefore rather in the light of nuisances than otherwise. The time seems not far distant when the remaining forests will be preserved as carefully as they have hitherto been recklessly swept away. The incresed expense of bringing lumber from great distances, and the constantly diminishing supply, will doubtless induce the owner of timber lands to take greater pains to such an indespensable material, in this new country more than in any other, that any failure in the supply becomes a question of enormous importance. But the so called, "wood famine," of which we begin to hear prophesies, is not so des perate a matter as an exhaustion of the WALL PAPER, BORDERINGS, AND coal supply in England, for the reason WINDOW SHADES .- 1500 roll of Wall that with care and time the foresti will Ohmer, at a meeting of the Montgomery, Ohio, Horticultural Society, said : What a mistake it is to suppose that a tree will grow and do well, when planting, to crowd the roots, which are often two feet in diameter, into a hole one foot wide, then throw on a shovelful or two of dirt and garvel, then stamp hard with the foot. This is how many plant trees. You have all observed the same thing, When you buy a tree, let it be fruit or shade, get one that has plenty of roots; dig your holes not less than three feet across, and two feet deep; partly fill up the hole with good soil; then put in your tree, a little, though not much, deeper than it was in the ground when taken up; spread out the roots with the hand and fingers; then more dirt (keeping your tree erect); then, when you are done, press the soil with the foot. ADVERTISING AGENTS .-- Many are the inquiries in relation to advertising agents. "Are they prompt?" Are they responsible? Do they understand their business? In many cases the inquiries are to be answered in the negative. In all large cities an ogency conducted by competent and reliable parties is absolutely necessary-sll others are a direct and positive injury to both advertiser and publisher To conduct the business successfully requires thorough knowledge of the standing, influence and circulations do tion of papers, to know when and where to place the advertisment that it will be most effective. The mere fact of an advertisement being in a paper is not sufficient, but have it written in form to be effective and placed in papers where it will be read and understood by the parties intended to be reached. All this n competent agent can do, and such an
