The Troubles in Southern Kansas.

[From the Leavenworth Times of Nov. 17.]

For a long time past we have been publishing reports from the southern portion of the Territory, which indicated that serious trouble was brewing in that quarter. Our accounts were from various sources, and we have given them without comment, or, at most, we have preferred to wait for full advices before giving the nature of the difficulties and their true origin. We have suspending our views thereon. We have now further and more definite intelligence from the locality in question than has yet been given to the public.

Our readers are familiar with the transactions in Bourbon county and his men played so prominent a part in '57-'58. The Amnesty Act, which was passed by the Legislature in '58, was intended to dispose of all the old differences between the Federal authorities and those who were under indictments from the United States Courts. After the passage of that bill, Montgomery and his confederates expressed themselves ready to yield submission to the legal tribunals, and to aid, if necessary, in the arrest of all offenders.

The difficulties of which we speak originated in the unfortunate struggles in the early history of the Territory, and, at first, the divisions of the contending parties were purely political ones. But as the progress of the border warfare, rascals of all kinds arrayed themselves around each banner, and, under the cover of Free State or Pro-Slavery sentiments, indulged their propensities for plunder and every species of villainy. Captain Montgomery had attached a lot of such characters to his command, but when peace was restored, it was believed that he would dissolve all further connection with them.

Lately he seems to have been engaged in organizing them into a company, and adding thereto a large number of honest but misguided men, who had suffered personally or through their friends from the outrages of the Border Ruffians, and were animated by a fanatical zeal in opposition to everything pro slavery.

Several months ago, Montgomery returned from a trip to the Eastern States, where he was engaged in procuring assistance to carry on his marauding enterprises. At that time, he made an inflammatory speech at Mound City, after which he proceeded to collect and arm his men.

Under the cover of anti-slavery pretences, his band have recently committed various depredations, to which they were partly incited by the action of some Missourians who still retain the old spirit. The first important feature of the present excitement was the trial and execution of one Hines by a number of Montgomery's men, headed by Dr. Jennison, his lieutenant. It was alleged by those who composed the mob court that Hines was a notorious character who had been ordered to leave the Territory in 1857; but the immediate charge against him was that he had spirited away a negro from Kansas into Missouri. Whether the negro was free or slave, we are unable to say, as our accounts of the transaction differ on that point—one being to the effect that the darkey was free, and was sold by Hines for gain; and the other, that Hines was a respectable citizen, and that he merely returned a slave to his rightful owner.

The same crowd who were guilty of this unjustifiable outrage then proceeded to make further arrests. They went to Mapleton, and arrested the postmaster there, for his complicity in some trial which took place in 1857 or '58. They acquitted him, and then turned their attention to two persons named Smith and Moore, who were sleeping together at the hotel. The former gave himself up immediately, but the latter sprang out of the bed as soon as they entered the room, and refused to surrender. Jennison, the leader of the party, at once fired his revolver, and the shot took effect in Moore's neck, fatally wounding him. In order to cover their attempt at Montgomery & Co. to excuse their murderous proceeding, on grounds is all a sham, it is proper to state that Mr. Lester D. Moore, the murdered man, was a pro-slavery man, strongly opposed to the lawless acts of the gang aforesaid. While these events were transpiring at Mapleton, Montgomery was stationed at Hudson, only ten miles off, and his aides were constantly riding between the two places, carrying his orders and furnishing him with accounts of what was being done by his "lieutenant."

The killing of Moore took place on Wednesday, and on Thursday Montgomery appeared at Mound City, and made a flaming speech, in which he declared that his object was to free the negroes along the Missouri and Arkansas borders, and that he would extend his operations down to Texas, and make the Free State men who were driven out of that State. He said he was not doing the bidding of any party—that he belonged neither to the Democratic nor Republicans, and that the latter might as well understand that he asked no favor at their hands, and that he was an Abolitionist. He announced his intention to drive out of the Territory all who opposed him, no matter what party they were members of.

Montgomery has now an equipped and mounted gang, numbering one hundred men. They are armed with a rifle, two of Colt's revolvers, one very revolver, and a sabre, and they thus constitute a splendid fighting corps, fully posted in every species of guerrilla tactics.

Last Saturday, intelligence reached this city that a large force was to attack upon Fort Scott. They have taken advantage of the indignation of the people at the foray of the Indian agent upon the Cherokee central land settlers, and at the refusal of the President to postpone the land sales, and under this feeling it was their intention to drive off the Land Commissioner and destroy it. They also have designs upon the records of the United States Courts, and the Government stores, for purposes of immolation. Nothing would be easier than for them to accomplish their purpose. The citizens of that section are maddened almost to desperation by the wrongs which they have suffered from the Administration, and would rather be disposed to encourage than to discourage such proceedings.

Latest advices from Fort Scott, Crawford, Cato, Mr. Wilson, merchants, have moved their goods out of town, and many others are hurrying in anticipation of an attack. The town will be taken on Sunday night.

Marshal Dolby and Mr. Mitchell, who left here some time ago for Fort Scott. The marshal had a case in the procession, with which he was attempting to serve some of the U. S. District Court. We have not heard of their arrival at Fort Scott. We have, that given all that has reached us up to the time of writing this article. Reports which have been strongly published here have been those which were strongly opposed to the present excitement, and it is said his present Holiness has lite-ally spent the day till 7 o'clock P. M. in one string of receptions. Most of the ecclesiastics resident in the Papal court rank as prelates; and the sacred household is at present composed of the Cardinal Secretary of State (prelate of the apostolic palaces), a major domo, maestro camera, an auditor, the maestro of the sacred palaces (who is always a Dominican, and head of the censorship over the press,) ten private chamberlains, one hundred and two private supernumerary chamberlains, all, like the former, of prelatical rank.

The Opera at New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—There was a tremendous rush at the Academy of Music on this, the opening night. The opera of "The Jewess" was produced in magnificent style, and Robert Anna Bishop, and Carl Formes received an enthusiastic greeting.

CITY ITEMS.

A CHURCH BAZAAR," in aid of the Cranmer Mission Chapel, will open in the large Saloon of the Assembly Buildings, Tenth and Chestnut streets, to-morrow, (Wednesday,) at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue open from 10 A. M. to 10 P. M., until Friday. On Thursday evening, (Thanksgiving Day,) the "Bazaar" will be enlivened by the presence of Haesler's orchestra. We are authorized to state that persons having articles to contribute in behalf of this worthy object, can send them to the Hall before 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

NEW STYLE FURS AT OAKFORDS'.—Nothing could be more appropriate to the season now upon us than the elegant new styles of Furs now exhibited at the establishment of Messrs. Charles Oakford & Sons, under the Continental Hotel. Yesterday, their sales in this department were probably larger than those of any other establishment in one day, in this city. Comment upon the taste displayed in this fine stock of Furs would be superfluous, as the fame of this house is proverbial in all their departments. Purchasers will remember that neither Mr. Oakford nor any of his sons are connected with any other house in this city bearing a similar name.

THANKSGIVING DAY.—The military will make a grand turn-out on the afternoon of Thanksgiving day, if the weather shall be alive with gallant soldiers in holiday attire. There will also be a great display of fall goods, and it is said in review of all circumstances, and in view of the approaching winter garments, procured at the extensive Clothing Hall of Rockhill & Wilson, Nos. 603 and 605 Chestnut street, above Sixth, where the most extensive assortment of fashionable and reliable clothing is now constantly on hand.

A PRETTY EXPERIMENT.—"SEEING THROUGH A MILE STONE?"—An exchange says: Take a sheet of foolscap or letter paper, roll it up so that the opening at one end shall be large enough to take in the fullsize of the eye, and at the other end let the opening be not half as large. Take it in the right hand, holding it between the thumb and the fore finger; place the large end to the right eye, and look through it, with both eyes open to the light. You will see a hole through your hand! If you take it in your left hand, it will be the same. You will in both cases be astonished to see that you have a hole in your hand, through which may be clearly discerned these words: Buy your clothes at the "one-price" Fashionable Emporium of Granville Stokes, No. 607 Chestnut street, where a handsome gift is presented to each purchaser.
