GRAND DRESS BALL AT SARATOGA.

[From the Saratogian.]

The grand dress ball at the U. S. Hotel on Wednesday evening, was as great a success as could be desired. Everything combined to make it so.

Mrs. General B—— was attired in a dress of rich crimson silk, the skirt having narrow flounces of the same; rich lace about the top of the corsage, and a rich and heavy shawl hung gracefully from her shoulders. On her head was a lace barb and crimson flowers.

Mad. C. P. de R——, of Havana, wore a dress of handsome lilac broche silk, trimmed with heavy rows of rich Point d'Alencon lace on a skirt and corsage; a head-dress of scarlet velvet and white feathers, and fully ornamented with pearls and diamonds, with necklace, bracelets, and ear-rings of pearls, emeralds, and diamonds, and in her hand carried a rich Point d'Alencon lace handkerchief, matching with the dress.

Mrs. L——y, of New York, wore a rich white silk dress, with pinked ruffles on the skirt, festooned with daisies; the corsage trimmed to match; her hair dressed with puffs and curls, and ornamented with white flowers.

Mrs. C—ds, of New York, was attired in a dress of rich lavender moire antique, with point lace berthe and pearl necklace.

Mrs. C—ke, of Otsego county, wore a dress of white tarlatan, trimmed with black velvet, and a white silk scarf trimmed with black lace.

Miss A—li, of Genesee, was dressed in white lace over white silk; the skirt looped up at the side, and trimmed with rushing; the corsage trimmed with black and white lace; pink flowers in her hair, and a coral necklace.

Miss C—e, of Boston, wore a Swiss muslin dress, flounced, with a blue sash; the corsage trimmed with lace, and roses and wheat ears in her hair.

Mrs. H—ll, of New York, was dressed in a fish lavender moire antique, and wore a very fine black lace shawl.

Miss H—id—n, of New York, wore a dress of white silk, with two heavy black lace flounces, headed with puffings of orange colored silk, and a band of same at bottom of skirt, the corsage cut low, and trimmed with orange-colored silk puffing—a dress much admired.

Miss H—d, of Cleveland, was attired in a white tarlatan dress, fully trimmed, and had a scarlet wreath in her hair.

Miss Carrie B—n, of New York, was very tastefully attired in a dress of blue silk, plain and rich, with peasant waist; her hair dressed in curls, with a lace barb.

Miss F. B—n, of New York, wore a white tarlatan over white silk, the skirt having a very deep hem; and hair a la Greque.

Miss G—r, of New York, was dressed in white silk, skirt trimmed with cherry-colored silk, edged with lace, put on in an elaborate pattern; a peasant waist of cherry silk over white tulle.

Miss S—g, of Philadelphia, wore a white dotted tarlatan, with small blue flowers, blue trimmings, and flowing sleeves; her hair dressed in heavy puffs, sprinkled with gold powder, and a lace barb and purple flowers.

Miss B—s, of Buffalo, was dressed in a white silk, the skirt trimmed with puffing of blue; the corsage trimmed with thread lace; a blue sash tied in front with gold flowers, hung gracefully from her shoulder. She wore fuschias and other natural flowers in her hair.

Miss B—n, of New York, wore a pink tarlatan over pink silk, elaborately puffed, with flowing lace sleeves, and black and white lace cape.

The youthful Miss D—n of Troy was very becomingly attired in a white spotted muslin, with scarlet sash and trimmings.

The dancing was kept up with becoming spirit until a late hour, ending with a splendid German, led by Mr. Bruen, of New York.

The Army Commanders.

[Army Correspondence of the Pittsburg Chronicle.]

We are again by the Rappahannock. Here Pope crossed last August, with the then impetuous, but now cold and still, Jackson after him in hot pursuit. Solid shot and debris of shell are lying around in last year's leaves that were exchanged in the "mighty argument" as to who should hold the very woods in which we now bivouac. Poor Pope! How sternly he fought and how reluctantly he yielded every inch of ground! God help those in the day of eternal reckoning who turned a deaf ear to his calls for reinforcements, preferring rather to see the head of a Western general "in a charger" than that laurels in the Southern Potomac Army. Thorns have since been found in the crowns of those who wore them by the sacrifice of this ill-fated hero, whom history will yet glorify.

We here meet many rumors of demoralized and demoralized condition of the rebels. We heard the same tales at United States Ford, and many were looking for the voluntary surrender of whole brigades, while at the same time Lee was hatching his raid into our borders. We are told that our army is undergoing a reorganization. General Meade is at least doing his share of the restoration of the exhausted troops. General Hooker intimated that he would be solicited to resume his functions was by the way of a well-ordered and provisioned brigade commissary, and our present commander is following in his train, and feeding well the army.

How comes it that every former commander of the army, on his removal, is attacked by the press, or a majority of its representatives, the clergy, and even a stump speaker who can congregate an audience in a village or at a rural smithy, as to his military antecedents, private character, personal habits, and (of late, since Henry Ward Beecher made it popular by his harangue to an English swell-mob, we have heard much of changes rung on the cup and the drunk at Chancellorville.) We have heard it contradicted by men of every rank in our regiment, who were honored by being in front of the General's headquarters during the hottest of the fight, and most of the hours of that memorable day in his immediate presence. They all denounce the charge as a base famous falsehood. His calm, placid demeanor, and his iron, inviincible coolness, have often been dwelt upon with pride and admiration, and we venture to say there is not a man who looked on General Hooker that day but will affirm that he was serene, sober, and fearless, as one should be in the jaws of death, with ten thousand lives hanging on his own. It is an outrage on a veteran soldier, who stood by the flag of his country when its best friends were dubious of its safety and triumph.

A FREE-LABOR PRESS AT VICKSBURG.—Mr. F. Montgomery, formerly editor of the Vicksburg Whig, but for a year past an exile from his home, has issued a prospectus for a weekly paper to be published in that place, under the name of the Vicksburg Union. This prospectus is significant from the fact that its writer has the advantage of observing the effects of slavery upon the prosperity of the country. Subjoined are the objects of the contemplated paper, which, if carried out, will be an ornament of the free-labor journals already established in the South:

1st. To show to the South the wonderful and miraculous results produced throughout the North by the great moving cause of all their material grandeur and greatness—free labor. While the South has remained stationary, and has had inexhaustible resources are comparatively untouched, the North, with a sterile soil and rigorous clime, has, by means of free labor, come to "blossom like the rose." The difference between the wealth, power, and resources of the two sections is perfectly amazing, and never was shown more clearly than in the present unfortunate war. While the horrors of war have been carried to every household in the South, extending to women and innocent children, and overspreading all one common gloom and ruin, the North presents the singular anomaly of carrying on a war of stupendous proportions and unexampled expense, without in the least crippling the resources of the people, or depriving them of a solitary source of comfort and enjoyment. In fact, the Northern masses never were so prosperous and its inhabitants never were so comfortable and contented as now. While all this is true of the North, it is patent to the South, enjoying as she does unequalled soil, climate, and productions, to inquire into the cause of the astonishing difference in the resources of the two sections. The Union will endeavor to show to the South the cause of the contrast and its cure.

2d. In the future adjustment of the difficulties at present existing, the Union will endeavor, by reflecting the Union sentiment of the South, to take a prominent and active part.

3d. The Union will endeavor, by furnishing accurate and reliable information, obtained by actual observation, to allay the prejudices which Southern demagogues have so long and so successfully have endeavored to stir up in the Southern mind against the North, hoping, that when the two sections come to know each other better, each may learn to love the other more.

4th. While the Union will scrupulously avoid all counsels of fanaticism, it will, nevertheless, advocate the most speedy and decisive measures for the entire and immediate extinction of the cause of all the present troubles, and the curse of the South—African slavery.
