We beg leave to invite the attention of PRINTERS and PUBLISHERS to our new
BREVIER, NONPAREIL, AND AGATE FACES,
As they appear in "THE PRESS"
believing that no specimens so fairly exhibit the real character of any type as those which show it in daily use.
We offer these faces as supplying a great desideratum in Newspaper Type, being full and clear,
BUT NEITHER UNDULY HEAVY NOR EXTENDED,
And we confidently rely on their merit to recommend them to public favor.
We are constantly increasing our varieties of
PLAIN AND FANCY JOB TYPE,
Which now include all the most desirable styles, and shall spare no effort to deserve a continuance of the patronage we have received.

The Pennsylvania Reserves.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 19.

To the Editor of The Press:

SIR: The newspapers have not done full justice to the Pennsylvania Reserves in the late fighting in "the Wilderness," where they are ending their terms of three years' service as brilliantly as they began it at Drainsville, in 1861, by the most heroic gallantry. It was one of the happiest conceptions of Governor Curtin, which he will have reason to be proud of throughout the remainder of his life, to have proposed and brought into existence, at a time when no one thought the rebellion could last three years, such a division as the Pennsylvania Reserves. The military organization of the corps was entrusted to General George A. McCall, and the splendid appearance and equipment of the corps, combining artillery, cavalry, infantry, and rifles, was mainly owing to the great experience and skill of that veteran officer. The different regiments were first organized, at various camps of instruction in the State. In these camps they remained until the first disaster to our arms at Bull Run. A message by lightning was sent to Gov. Curtin, and in three days the infantry regiments of the Reserves were here to protect the national capital, with Gen. McCall at their head. Their march through Baltimore, when Secessionism was at the height of exultation, will not soon be forgotten. In a short time after reaching Washington, they were concentrated at the village of Tennallytown, six miles north of the city. Here they were speedily organized by brigades, with such brigade commanders as General John F. Reynolds at the head of the 1st Brigade, and General George G. Meade, the distinguished commander-in-chief of the glorious Army of the Potomac, at the head of the 3d Brigade. The 3d Brigade remained for some time under the command of Col. McCalmont, but General G. O. Ord was subsequently placed in command of it. The division was then moved across the Potomac to a point on the Leesburg turnpike known as Langley, and formed the extreme right division of General McClellan's army on that line. Through the winter the brigades underwent a systematic course of camp and field instruction at the hands of their skillful commanders. No one who ever saw a review of the Reserve Corps at that time will ever forget the grand and brilliant spectacle. The State flags, destined afterward to be so richly emblazoned with names of victorious battle-fields, were here formally presented to the different regiments, who received them with enthusiasm and vows of devotion which have been sealed with the life blood of Pennsylvania's noblest youth and chivalry.

The Pennsylvania Reserve Corps was at this time not less than ten thousand strong, and was beginning to march with the steady tread and solid front of veterans. The impatience with which our people regarded the prolonged inactivity of Gen. McClellan's splendid army on the south bank of the Potomac will be remembered. It was the good fortune of the Pennsylvania Reserves to be the first to break the silence and inaugurate the clash of battle on the part of the Army of the Potomac. And right dauntlessly did they bear themselves as their rifles rang out the first musketry fire, and flushed with their triumph at Bull Run. The victory of the Reserves at Drainsville, on the 18th of December, 1861, although a mere "affair" in comparison with the gigantic conflicts of the last two years, was decisive. It electrified the nation. It was a victory at the most opportune moment, and the Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, from that day, have been conspicuous in the public eye. Nor have they ever once disappointed the public expectation. Three years have rolled by, whose annals are crimsoned with gory battle-fields, and in the thickest of the strife—in the terrible seven days before Richmond—at the second Bull Run—at South Mountain and Antietam—afterward at Fredericksburg—then at immortal Gettysburg, and now again in the dark and bloody ground of the Wilderness, do we hear of the noble Reserves fighting on, fighting ever.

As an officer of the division and having been with it on several fields, although not in this last campaign, owing to being on duty elsewhere, I am proud to learn that the Reserves have behaved with a gallantry in the recent battles near Spottsylvania Court House, which, if possible, eclipses their bravery on other fields. For the last year they have been under the command of Gen. S. W. Crawford, who bravely and gallantly led them in the Wilderness as he did at Gettysburg. Severe losses, I am informed, took up not less than 300 officers and 1,300 men. Of the original division of over 10,000 strong, but a small remnant is left. When it is known that they entered into the last battles, on the very eve of the expiration of their term of service, their self-sacrificing patriotism will be better appreciated. All the men of the different regiments who have not re-enlisted as veterans are now ordered home, to be mustered out of the service. One gallant regiment, the 7th, by a most unfortunate disaster, but in no way discreditable to the officers or men, was captured almost entire, and will be missed as their comrades return home again. But we trust that the victorious operations of Grant and Meade will not long leave them in rebel captivity.

I am, sir, truly yours, E. B.

THE WAR.

Incidents of the Capture of Dalton, Ga., May 13.

[Correspondence of the Cincinnati Commercial.]

READING OLD ABE'S PROCLAMATION ON ROCKY FACE.—Brigadier General Kimball informs me of an incident, that occurred on his line of operations, that is too good to be lost: While his brigade occupied the gap between Oak Knob and Rocky Face, yesterday, a corporal of Company I, 60th Illinois, broke from the line, and under cover of projecting ledges got up within twenty feet of a squad of rebels on the summit. Taking shelter from the sharpshooters, he called out:

"I say, rebs, don't you want to hear Old Abe's amnesty proclamation read?"

"Yes! yes!" was the unanimous cry, "give us the ape's proclamation."

"Attention!" commanded the corporal, and in a clear and resonant voice he read the amnesty proclamation to the rebels, beneath the cannon planted by rebel hands to destroy the fabric of Government established by our fathers. Then, he arrived at those passages of the proclamation where the negro was referred to he was interrupted by cries of "None of your d—d Abolitionism—look out for rocks!" And down over his hiding-place descended a shower of stones and rocks. Having finished the reading, the corporal asked:

"Well, rebs, how do you like the terms? Will you hear it again?"

"Not to-day, you bloody Yank. Now crawl down in a hurry and we wont fire," was the response; and the daring corporal descended and rejoined his command, which had distinctly heard all that passed. I regret I could not learn the name of the corporal, for he must get promotion at the hands of Father Abraham and Governor Dick Yates.

SHELL BOWS THE RANDALS.—On Thursday, while on Rocky Face, General Howard stood upon a projecting ledge of rocks from which he could see a large force of rebels upon a projecting spur of the ridge immediately beneath him. Tired of gazing upon the enemy, the General, in the absence of hand grenades, lighted the fuse of shells, and amused himself by dropping them down into the centre of the enemy, in whose ranks there was quite a lively commotion in consequence. The frightened enemy little suspected that the hand that dropped the shells into their ranks was the companion of the one lost at Fair Oaks by the fearless leader of the 11th Army Corps.

DETERMINED TO HAVE A SHOT.—During the whole operations of Saturday and Sunday Beatty's brigade, of Woods's division, was in reserve. The boys did not relish their position, and, while the battle raged with great fury, they showed unmistakable signs of uneasiness. One fellow, more daring than his companions, quietly sauntered out and made for the front. Meeting a wounded soldier returning from the front, the "Buckeye" borrowed his "rifle" and entered Hazen's brigade, where he fought bravely until shot in the jaw. Retiring to the rear, he met a staff-officer, who inquired the number of his regiment, and, learning it was not under fire, asked how he came to be wounded. "Well," replied the soldier, "you see, I don't like to be back in the rear, so I came out to take a shot at the Johnnys, and I be dogged if they haven't peppered me."

"COME IN OUT OF THE WET."—At nine on Saturday night the 19th Alabama was lying in line, with a rebel battery separating it from another regiment. The battery was withdrawn, and the colonel of the 19th went down to fill the gap with his regiment; he was accompanied by 400 men. Arriving at the gap they found it filled by pickets, who quietly "took them in out of the wet," and brought them to our lines as prisoners. The boys had crawled up unobserved, and filled the gap in the enemy line, captured Colonel McSpadden and companions, and retired without receiving a shot. I received this from the rebel colonel himself, who highly praised the strategy of his captors.

INCIDENTS OF THE BATTLE IN VIRGINIA.

(Correspondence of the N. Y. Tribune).

GEN. HANCOCK AT THE WILDERNESS.—Always at the front when danger most threatened, ubiquitous, at one time leaning upon the breech of a blockened and hell-vomiting gun, instructing the gunners where to direct their fire, at another, along the infantry lines, encouraging the men, now ordering up reinforcements or making changes in the lines, and always exposed to the murderous fire of sharpshooters and the swept storm of shot and shell. "At one time, when he was directing the fire of a battery in the captured works, and when cannoneers and gunners were falling torn and mangled around him," said an officer to the writer yesterday, "I felt an almost irresistible impulse to approach him and say, in General, for God's sake, retire to a less dangerous position! Tall and portly, he must have made an excellent target for the enemy, but, fortunately for the country, to which his services are so invaluable, he escaped unscathed."

WE'LL RALLY ROUND THE FLAG, BOYS.—During one of these eventful nights, when the troops lay in line of battle behind their temporary fortifications of dirt, logs, and rails, and the continuous crack of the sharpshooters rifle rolled along our front, a solitary voice struck up the patriotic song, "I'll rally round the flag, boys," and almost instantly thousands of the men, who seemed to have been waiting for something to dissipate the gloom which thoughts of the day's carnage had engendered, were shouting in a chorus which "shook the depth of the forest's gloom":

"The Union forever, hurrah, boys, hurrah!
Down with the traitors and up with the stars," &c.

As down the line it went, the refrain swelled into one vast roar, exultant, triumphant, and breathing defiance to the wary enemy, whose only reply was the spiteful whiz of extra bullets from their skirmish line whistling harmlessly by. This little episode tended greatly to inspire our troops, and could not but have equ
