The Fair and the Country Folks.

To the Editor of The Press:

SIR: The fourth suggestion of the Committee of Arrangements for the Sanitary Fair in your city betrays a coolness and lack of proper information which are at once amusing and provoking. It is recommended with all seriousness to the honest but verdant country people that they come in their "best covered wagons," provided with such articles of "food and bedding" as will suffice for a temporary stay of a day or two in the city. And not content with the simple suggestion, the committee actually attempts to argue the question, urging that either taste, not only the practicability, but even the ease and elegance of such a scheme. In justice to the country people we cannot forbear commenting a very little upon the idea.

It seems taken for granted that the "inhabitants of the rural districts" know practically little or nothing about railroads, and that their journeys to and from the city are made in large wagons, capacious enough to hold a platoon of soldiers. The "best covered wagons" in which the country people go to meeting upon the Sabbath, or when they use to make excursions during the week, are on the same pattern and fitted with the same elegance as those used for conveying Government stores or Quesesqua Iron ore. The idea that the "best covered wagons" really consist of the more modern one-horse chaise or coach, such as are used in the streets of the Metropolis, never seems to have crossed the minds of the committee. If it had, certainly the proposition would never have been made, that the country people bring bedding. Do the committee really suppose there will be found in the breast of every countryman and woman an echo to the sentiment that "with such easy and economical provision as every farmer's family could make, it is believed that those who choose to visit the city during the Fair, in the mode suggested, would find themselves entirely independent in their movements, and have as much comfort and protection as could be desired?"

We know it used to be thought by city folks that while their friends in the country were very good to forward butter and chickens, and other luxuries, and indeed might prove of some service knitting stockings and making rough work, &c., for the fairs, yet they were by no means fitted for polite society. But we thought a somewhat intimate acquaintance between the parties, arising from the giving and receiving of entertainment during the sweltering summer months, had long ago dispelled that notion. Here, however, the same idea again makes its appearance. The committee would very politely inform their country cousins, that it considers them very good sort of folks, very good to look upon in gala trim and big wagons, but not quite the sort to make much trouble about or to receive with ordinary entertainment.

If we had a fair in the country, I am sure we would not extend the invitation given by this committee. We should say to the city folks: "Come, and we will receive you as best we can." We could never hoped it in our hearts to compete with our invitation an implied belief in the stupidity or ignorance of our guests. We should never suggest that they come in their "best covered wagons," and "bedding styles," and that the bottom of their coaches be lined with suitable bedding, which would constitute "such excellent temporary lodgings" for them.

We beg leave, therefore, to protest against this offensive language. We are sure that every intelligent country people will prefer to stay at home rather than be gazed at as the boors who sleep in covered wagons, and are the special "protegees" of "the excellent police." We are no money to spend at this Fair, and we are deeply interested in the welfare of our wounded legions, but we never can submit to the obtrusion of a feeling, the coolness of which is only equalled by the unjust and provoking implications with which its invitations abound.

Very truly, RUSTICUS.

The articles entrusted to the care of Mr. Barclay will be safely returned to the owners immediately after the closing of the Fair.

THE YOUNG LADIES OF EDEN HALL SEMINARY.

The following letter speaks for itself:

PHILADELPHIA, June 3, 1864.—JOHN W. CLAGHORN, Esq., Treasurer of the "Committee on Incomes," &c., for the Sanitary Fair, DEAR SIR: I have been requested by the ladies of the "Convent of the Sacred Heart," at Eden Hall, near Torresdale, in this city, to convey to the accompanying sum of one hundred and twelve dollars, being the offering of the pupils of that school to the fund of the Sanitary Fair to be held for the benefit of the sick and wounded soldiers.

It is gratifying to me to be the medium of conveying to you this evidence of the patriotic and philanthropic teaching and practice of that institution.

I am, with great respect, your friend and servant, JOS. R. CHANDLER.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OUR DOMESTIC MARKETS.

It will be seen by our rates to-day that meats of all kind remain about the same as last week; if anything, there is a slight decline. At the beginning of this week strawberries made their appearance in large numbers, and now the prices are somewhat lower, on account of the supply not being quite sufficient for the demand. Most of these are from New Jersey, and present a palatable appearance. The stalls in the markets are piled with all kinds of vegetables of all kinds, and most of the summer delicacies will meet the gaze of the purchaser today:

ANOTHER RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

Last evening, about 6 o'clock, a man named William Stocks, residing at 716 Green street, fell from a car of the Green and Coates-streets Railway, and had both legs run over.

PROF. WOODWARD, D. HITCHCOCK, D. D., of New York, the celebrated divine and eloquent platform speaker, has been engaged to deliver an address in this city, on the evening of the 16th inst., at the anniversary exercises of the Philadelphia Collegiate Institute for Young Ladies.

"EMAIL DE PARIS" FOR ENAMELLING THE SKIN.

Email de Paris, for enamelling the skin, is now for the first time announced, and imported into the United States. Eugene Joulin, sole agent for the "Email de Paris," No. 111 South Tenth street, before Chestnut. Orders by mail for the "Email de Paris" should be addressed Jared & Rene, general importers, Philadelphia.

THE POLICE.

LOOK OUT FOR PICKPOCKETS!

It is very evident that the well-known Philadelphia professional thieves generally are absent attending fairs and other large congregations in different parts of the country; but their places have been supplied by a number of thieves who are unknown to the police of Philadelphia. Their intention is to ride in the cars to and from the Sanitary Fair Grounds. They will also visit the Fair, and, notwithstanding the holy cause for which it is organized, will steal anything they can lay their hands upon, either from the tables or the pockets of the visitors. Chief Buggies, of the entire force, and Lieut. Franklin, of the detective branch, are perfecting arrangements to prevent any depredations, yet the people themselves must be on their guard. The assembling of railroad cars will afford a fine opportunity for thieves. There is every reason to believe there will be an unusual number of female pickpockets travelling in the cars.

[Before Mr. Alderman Beitler.]

FEMALE SHOPLIFTERS.

Two pretty, well-dressed women, giving the names of Lydia Burns, residing at 1326 Andover street, and Elizabeth Craven, residing near Ridge avenue and Poplar street, were arraigned yesterday afternoon at the Central Station, on the charge of stealing a piece of goods at the store of Mr. Edward Hall, on South Second street. A lady attendant at the store testified that the two women came into the store about one o'clock, in company; that they asked the store several times; she saw one of them (Mrs. Burns) secrete a piece of Cylinda for silk of her dress, after which she went to the other department and proposed to go out. Witness called the attention of Mr. Hall, who proceeded at once to have the women arrested. The latter let the piece of goods drop on the floor.

The magistrate asked Lydia whether she had any remarks to make or questions to ask.

Answer, quick, "No, sir. I have nothing to say."

"Have you anything to say?" asked the Alderman, directing his conversation to the other defendant.

"Yes, sir," she replied. "I have a few remarks to make. I went to the store to give a piece of wedding cake to a young lady who attended me; I was told that she had gone to dinner; while I was waiting for her, the gentleman of the store stepped up to her (Lydia Burns) and touched her on the shoulder; I did not know what she had there."

While the defendant was thus speaking, the Alderman was busy writing out the commitment. The parties were required to enter $1,000 bail each to answer at Court.

PROFESSIONAL PICKPOCKETS.

Detective Henderson arraigned three young men on the charge of being professional thieves, they having arrived in this city for the purpose, it is thought, of paying some attention to the people's pockets at or going to or coming from the Great Sanitary Fair. They gave the following names and addresses: Charles Boyer, residing in Sixth street, in the western part of Baltimore; Thos. Harrington, residing in Commercial street, near Charter, in Boston; and James Harris, residing at No. 49 Elizabeth street, New York.

Mr. Henderson testified that on Thursday night, on coming from the steamboat landing at Walnut-street wharf, he observed two of the defendants, Boyer and Harrington, get off a Richmond car, at Second street, and follow the platform of another going out Walnut street. In doing so an attempt was made to pick the pocket of a lady. The other defendant got on the car some distance up the street. They were all acquainted with each other, though the officer did not see Harris do anything. He was discharged. The other defendants were committed in default of $1,200 bail each to answer.

[Before Mr. Alderman Fields.]

BRUTAL EFFECTS OF DRUNKENNESS.

Yesterday morning Patrick Convery was arraigned on the charge of committing an assault and battery on his mother-in-law on Thursday night. The testimony in evidence developed another chapter on the brutality of drunkenness. It seems that he was very much intoxicated, as he had been on many occasions before, and between twelve and one o'clock at night staggered home, near Dunmore street and Germantown road, beat his wife and thrust her into the street. The mother-in-law interfered to save her daughter, and she was pitched into the street. The consequent outcries attracted the police, and the defendant was taken into custody. He was committed in default of $1,200 bail to answer.

THE COURTS.

District Court—Judge Sharswood.

Rice vs. Howell. A mechanic's claim. Before reported. Verdict yesterday for plaintiff for $82.38.

This being the last case on the list ready for trial jurors were discharged from further attendance, and the court adjourned.

The only other court in session was the Orphans' Court, which was held by Judge Ludlow. The list was called, and all the cases thereon disposed of.
