A SENTIMENTAL WISHES.

BY THE BARD OF TOWER HALL.

Now chap, though I cannot tell why,
I wished that he was a butterfly,
Born in a bower,
A place that's nice enough when green,
But cold in winter, and no screen
From a hard shower.

Though 'twould be so fine to sup
Nectar and breakfast within the cup,
Of a sweet flower;
And nice it is, until you wake
To find some urchin rude does take
You in his power.

Though gay the wings you might bespread
Spotted with black, gold-color, red;
They are flimsy wear;
When torn no sartor can mend their rents,
Nor do they give the least defence
Against nipping air.

The human mould still give to me,
And never shall I wish to be
Any sort of fly,
Whatever gaudy wing it shows—
I choose more serviceable clothes
From Bennett's to buy!

Stock being constantly replenished by large additions, we are enabled to offer a large assortment of all kinds, styles, and sizes of clothing at the lowest possible prices.
