COST LITTLE $60.

Proprietor of Scrantonian Settles for Libel Published in That Paper.

The case of H. J. Hockenberry against the proprietors of the Scrantonian for the publication of a libelous article, did not come before the grand jury yesterday as was expected. Richard Little came to this city and disclosed the name of the correspondent. John M. Forbes, exhibiting to Attorney Horton checks for Mr. Forbes salary, and making affidavit that he was the author of the offensive effusion. Mr. Little also paid all the costs, amounting to $60.

The report that Mr. Hockenberry had a warrant issued for Mr. Forbes, who is advertising solicitor for the News, and correspondent for the Scranton Republican, is not true, though one will be issued today unless Mr. Forbes makes retraction over his name in all the local and some of the Scranton papers.

BUSINESS CHANGES.

W. T. Morgan will soon open a department store in this city. It has been said he would build on the Arnold lot on North Main street, but yesterday the indications were that the deal which has been under consideration for the acquisition of the Church street property of W. S. Maxey will be closed.
