Portable Thrashing Machines and Separators.

WARRANTED to be thoroughly built, and to work well; made and sold by BASTIAN & CARROL, opposite Shoenberger's Rolling Mill, 568 Penn street, Pittsburgh. The Thrashing Machines are beautiful, simple and compact, are easily removed from place to place, and may be used with equal convenience in barns or fields. No machine runs lighter, thrashes faster, or does better work. More than 3,000 of them are now in use in the Western States, and on the east of the Mountains. Many of them have thrashed from 80 to 100,000 bushels each; and, on thorough trial, they have been recommended by the farmers who use them, to be as complete, and to work as well as any in the world. The Separator is Root's Patent, with Bastian's improvement, and is attached to the Thrasher, and completely separates the straw and chaff from the grain, and has given entire satisfaction wherever tried. ☞ All Machines warranted to work well, or no sale. ...

SIMES' PHILA. FRUIT DROPS—A new and delicious confection possessing the flavor of the following different fruits: pine apple, strawberry, raspberry, banana, vanilla, orange, lemon, apple, quince, jargonelle, pear, &c. These drops are rendered slightly acidulous with pure Lemon Juice and are tonic, refreshing and healthful like the ripe fruit which they represent. They may be usefully employed in colds, sore throat, fever, or any inflammatory complaint, or to cover the taste of disagreeable medicines. Simes' Fruit drops are entirely distinguished from all others by the purity and genuineness of the fruit essences; by the freedom from poisonous color or mineral acid and by their superior flavor. PRESIDENT FILLMORE AND THE COMPROMISE.—The following remarks were made by Senator Pratt, of Maryland, in a late discussion in the United States Senate:

Mr. Pratt said he did not propose to enter into the debate; his object was only to do justice to one who was once associated with the Senate, but who was not here. He meant the President of the United States. A report had been circulated that Mr. Fillmore, while presiding officer of this body, under the expectation that the casting vote in relation to the Compromise measures might be thrown upon him, had determined to vote against them. The rumor descended to particulars, and it was reported that he had previously prepared a paper in which the reasons were given for such a vote. He (Mr. P.) thought this rumor very surprising, because he recollected at the time, when it was supposed that the passage of the measures would possibly depend upon the casting vote of Mr. Fillmore, he had an interview with him, and advised him (believing, as he did, that the peace of the country required something to be done, and because he was elected on the same ticket with the gentleman who was at that time President,) to confer with Gen. Taylor, and request him to withdraw his opposition, and suffer them to pass.—Mr. Fillmore replied that his relations towards Gen. Taylor would not permit him to do so, but that he (Mr. Fillmore) was in favor of the Compromise measures. When he (Mr. Pratt) heard of the rumor, he went to Mr. Fillmore, who authorized him to say that it was utterly unfounded in fact. On the contrary, he was in favor of the measures during the whole period they were discussed, and at no time, if left to his vote, would he have voted against them.

GENERAL WINFIELD SCOTT.

It would be difficult to point to a more illustrious example of a military man recorded in our annals since the Revolution, than General Winfield Scott. In addition to eminent talent for the fearful art, which has conferred upon him an enduring fame, his gigantic person fills out the sketch, the imagination always suggests of the leader of an armed host, and the hero of many victories. It is no small satisfaction therefore, while poring over the over interesting story of the Great Captain of our revolution, the first in peace as well as war—to know that he was mighty in limb as well as intellect, and could, like another Douglass, beat down opposing foeman with his ponderous battle axe. And when we read, the exploits of Alexander, Cæsar or Bonaparte, there is a strong perception of the want of a certain dramatic congruity in associating deeds of greatness with men no way remarkable for their physique. To fulfil one's pre-conceived idea, and complete our pleasure, Rolla and Othello must tower above their fellows.

The first appearance of Gen. Scott prominently on the stage of action was as the compeer of Brown, Macomb, Gaines, and others nearly forty years ago in the battles with the English on our frontier of the North. In those sanguinary encounters, he met an enemy worthy of his steel, and laid the foundation of a monument which he has since that time gloriously completed. Opportunities have occurred since those memorable achievements for signal services to his country in the maintenance of its peace, which he has honorably improved. And let it be acknowledged, because we think it is the truth, that military men of character are not more forward than civilians in fomenting intestine dissensions, or kindling the flames of international war. During an interval of thirty years from the conclusion of war with England, the country rested in a profound peace. In such a state of affairs a theatre of course was wanting for the display of the shining qualities of a soldier, and no occasion whatever could be expected to arise for the acquisition of fresh honors. This is a time for the laurels of war to fade. Not so, however, when they are found intertwined with the wreath of civic virtues, as in Scott. For the greater part of the period we have mentioned, though in the command only of a division of what by a kind of a figure or courtesy of speech is denominated the American army, of which he was the head after the decease of Gen. Brown, yet Gen. Scott never ceased to be the only object of national admiration. Owing to his many accomplishments, and to the general belief of his possession of rare qualifications for civil administration, his reputation continually increased till he was by many thought of for the very highest offices in the State.

It was at this time that the Mexican war broke out, engendered not by military men, but by the intrigues of politicians. The general was now an old man; but age had touched his person gently, and his chivalrous and daring spirit, not at all. When the exigency of the service required more forces in the field, and political jealousy and party injustice could no longer detain at home the Commander-in-chief of the army; and prevent his leading it in person against the foe, he was reluctantly permitted to submit a plan for the conquest of Mexico, and what was of the last importance, to execute it himself. The slender means he had at his command for so arduous an undertaking, and with which he was nevertheless willing to embark in it, and risk his hardly earned fame upon the issue, furnished abundant matter of surprise, not only to his countrymen, but to soldiers in other lands, who watched this remarkable enterprise with uncommon interest. Notwithstanding the great, yet unexpected success of Gen. Taylor, the departure of Scott with a bold resolution to strike at once at the very heart of the enemy, was viewed by all with a feeling of national pride, and by some with considerable apprehension. We have said that this daring act was looked upon with universal pride. There were a few, however, as is well known, who regarded the undertaking, at least the General's share in it, with ill-dissembled envy, which occasioned the remark, when Scott set out, that he had placed himself between two fires, whereof the one he left behind him was by far the worst.

The alacrity with which the brave soldier left his country on his hazardous expedition, rendered so by the unfriendly climate, and the jealousy of rivals, as well as by the inevitable chances of war, though probably impaired, could not be subdued by the hostility he left at home. Still, notwithstanding his delicate position, which there was not wanting men to make as uncomfortable as possible, it was a rare and affecting sight to see a General, already past his grand climacteric, set everything at risk, and rush to battle, it might be almost said, with the temerity of a young man, who had everything to gain and nothing to lose. With the same fearless ardor with which he commenced, do we observe him rapidly advancing, and overcoming every obstacle that opposed him in his march from Vera Cruz to the city of the Aztecs. With the triumphs of Cerro Gordo and Chapultepec, and the other miracles of his career, his triumphal advance on the ancient mistress of the mines looks like a fabulous expedition of antiquity, or the almost fabulous Persian triumphs of Alexander. It may excite a smile in some perhaps, if the battles of Scott in Mexico should be compared with those of Bonaparte in Italy. But the inferior number of the combatants in Mexico, do not impair the science of the General's plan of the battles; and those of Scott remind us at the time of those masterly geometric problems worked out and demonstrated by the modern Hannibal at Lodi and Marengo. Men were moved in both, as upon a chess board, agreeably to programmes previously assigned them, delineated on maps by lines and angles with the certainty of mathematics. The Mexican campaign placed the crowning stone upon the monument which Gen. Scott had more than thirty years before commenced at Bridgewater and Chippawa.

The consequence of these numerous exploits, terminating in the capture of the capital of Mexico, was easily foreseen. It was felt by the whole country, that the American General had thus opened a pathway to the most exalted station in it. This entirely spontaneous feeling spread among the people from year to year, till it has placed his name at length in a triumviral rate, so distinguished that to be accounted worthy of a place in it, is alone of the highest honors a citizen can receive. However some may have reason to repine at his high fortune and expectations, and hate the lustre of his name, all must admit his eminent position and the value of his many services. We speak not of the rewards which he deserves for these; least of all, shall we pretend to disclose the decrees of destiny, before the finger of time shall have turned over the leaves of the book of the coming year, and pointed to the page where they are written. Enough has been recorded in the biography of the past of Scott, to satisfy the ambition of a great and generous nature; and his monument will be lofty enough if not another block should be added to its summit. If his country shall decline to rear it higher, it will not be left imperfect; if they resolve to place still another stone upon its pinnacle, the foundation is strong enough to bear it.—Newark Advertiser.

DISAPPEARANCE OF A LAKE.—A lake about two miles and a half long, and located eight miles from the village of Brighton, (Canada) burst its banks on the 12st ult., and completely drained out the water on the neighboring land. The bank through which the water broke was about forty feet in height. The rush of water dug a channel twenty-five feet deep and one hundred feet wide, for a length of two miles, uprooting forest trees, carrying away mill-dams, and drowning two men. Thus occurred the singular phenomenon of a lake being dried in a few hours.

IMPORTANT PUBLIC SALE.

BY order of the Trustees of the Bank of the United States, under deed of assignment of May 1, 1841, will be sold at Public Sale, at the Merrick House, in the Borough of New Brighton, Beaver county, Pennsylvania, on THURSDAY, the 10th of June, 1852, all the right, title and interest in the following Real Estate, held by the said Trustees in Beaver county, viz:

No. 1. Six acres of Coal Land, adjoining the village of Sharon, bounded by lands of Daren, Ray, &c. This lot has valuable coal privileges, and is in the immediate vicinity of the markets. A portion of it is cleared for cultivation, having a small frame house, for a tenant.
