One vote is giv- is possible that the government may en to each District and the caudidate who carries the majority of Districts in each state secures two votes from the state at large. If the state is ; equally divided each candidate takes one vote from the state at large and a majority of all the votes elects. The plan is simple, clear in all its workings and unobjectionable in every way. If some method of this kind is not adopted we may expect serious complications at every recurring election which will some time be aggravated to a determined appeal to arms by a disappointed candidate and his partisans. The country cannot afford that such disgraceful scenes as are now convulsing Louisiana should ever follow the occurrence of a national election and be reenacted in all the States of the Union.
