That Sleigh Ride.

We were one of a party of some twenty or twenty five couples that went a sleighing to Centreville, and to a dance at the McCauley House, last Thursday evening. The sleighing was all that could reasonably be asked, and in about an hour and a half from the time of starting we were landed at the McCauley House where we found a jovial company already assembled. We noticed among the number Charles MeVean, postmaster at St. Mary's, and some ten or fifteen couples that halled from the same place.

We forgot to mention that it was a n old folke's party although from the way the old boys danced and told stories, etc., (etc., which means fire-water) one would suppose them to have been a party of youngsters, in their teens. Harm's string sand consisting in part of James Harm and Frank Dill furnished music for the occasion, and from the rapid manner in which dance succceded dance, no one will accuse them of neelecting their vocation. Among other gentlen en present we noticed Isane Horton, and Alf. Short of Nor heast, but speaking of Isaac reminds us of a story that John Kime told us during the progress of the the political canvass, Isane discovered that his eyesight was growing dim, and, pondering he concluded that he would purchase a pair of spectacles. He dropped in to Powell & Kime's store for that purpose; several pairs were shown him. some too old; finally he picked up a pair, tried them on and with a newspaper before his eyes, declared that the eyes of his boyhood days never served him better; and taking the clerk to task for not having The clerk took the spectacles; and putting both her eyes. his finger throw the bows convinced Isaac that there was no glass in them, proving that Isaac was laboring under an optical illusion. What did Isanc de? Nothing, he only laughed. But to return to the dance. Isane was the first one on the floor and the last one to leave in the morning; he said he could't half dance because his clusion that all present were unanimous in the opinion that it was the best dance of the season.

The supper was very good, and much think the host and hostess of the McCauley | Dixon, principal of the Ridgway school. House are deserving of a great deal od Of courte there is some time to elapse praise, f r such an e'e ant repast and gotten up in the short time of one day. We for one, say let's go again.

In the morning we came home but the bright vision of the night before was lost to our mind, and, in the language of the poet we exclaimed:

Bel Is are ringing all the day, Money spent amd thrown away, For sure there is the de-l to pay, When a man goes out a sleighing.
