English Churches.

(The "Sir Early Lost" Rise London left as a legacy to the world, a sort-like of unpublished poems, one of which is the following, touching and beautiful.)

How beautiful they stand,
Those ancient altars! for we live in a
Sick land!
And the mature fields and grave green woods,
And the unmoulding, clovey pathways;
By rivers broad that rush into the sea,
By little brooks that, with a lisper's sound,
Like playful children, run by copse and lea;
Each in its place is by ground,
Most beautiful they stand,
Those old gray churches of our native land!

Our lives are all turmoil!
Our souls are in a weary strife and toil,
Grasping and striving—racking nerve and brain,
With day and night for gain!
We have grown worldly—have made gold our god—
Have turned our hearts away from lovely things;
We reel not now the wild flower on the sod;
We see not snow fold-d angel's wings!
Amid the summer skies,
For vicious come not to pollinted eyes!

Yo blessed quiet fanes!
Still piety, s ill poetry remains,
And that remains, which even on the air
One chaplet bell calls high and low to prayer—
While every green grass sunny church-yards keep
The dust of our fathers, and some are shed
Wrong tenets which in the human heart lie deep;
Something in these still holy days we feed,
To keep our spirits lively,
Keep within us the heart-sweet thoughts and holy!

And 'tis for this they stand,
The old gray churches of our native land!
And even in the cold corrupted heart,
Amid the sinners city bustle,
They stand; and chantry dim, and organ sound,
Are sweet, and sweet the prayer and strain,
Like to the righteous inn which were not found
Amid the sinners city hurly and uproar,
Man's pride and love shower—
Better in time of need than shield and spear!
