PITTSBURGH GAZETTE

"Fashion.—The extravagance in linen articles in Paris is at the present time, without parallel. The correspondent of the Journal of Commerce remarks that on handkerchiefs particularly is lavished all the needlework can give of taste and elegance. There is the imperial handkerchief, embroidered in gold and silver, to prevent other embroidered in gold and silver; to prevent this embroidery being too dead and heavy, the modistes blend with it a silky cotton, which throws a satinade around the gold; there is also the Pompadour handkerchief worked all over with violets in a mother-of-pearl cotton; the mediæval handkerchief, with escutcheons and arms; the Francis the First handkerchief, the Pompadour handkerchiefs an assemblage of flowers, arabesques, and foliage.

Every possible effort will be made to secure the moral and intellectual improvement of the young ladies. A CARD.—In retiring from the superintendence of the Edgeworth Seminary, the undersigned would return his sincere thanks to his patrons and friends for their liberal support and encouraging kindness, and would commend them to the institution he has formed for the transfer of their patronage, which will be adapted to its successful management, as far as he will adapt to the peculiar tastes of those who are to be under them. Knowing, at least, the peculiar tastes of those who he would more readily entrust the education of a young daughter to, he could have no more cheerfully, or more confidently recommend to his late patrons and friends, the Edgeworth Seminary.
