John C. Breckinridge. John C Breckinridge died last Monday May 17th aged 54 years. The Philadelphia Times very properly says "he leaves the saddest history of all the men of his time Others have hoped, and erred and failed, but none climbed so high in the morning of a life of brightest promise, to fall so hopelessly Of proud Kentucky line age, gifted and cultivated to a degree that distanced common rivalry, and entering the councils of the nation when scarcely thirty, after having vanquished Governor Morehead and Leslie Coombs in the old Whig district of Henry Clay, he was greeted by his party as the coming man, and at once took the highest rank in political leadership. When but thirty-four years of age he was the nominee of the then dominant party of the nation for Vice President, and entered the chair of the lic before he had reached the noontime life. And when the eventful days of the Buchanan administration had ended, he stepped from the chair to the floor of the Senate, to wear the honors of Kentucky as her leading Senator Even when war came he was steadfast and sat in the extra session of the Senate that accepted the inevita ble arbitration of the sword, and marskalled the loyal people for the struggle It was in the capital of the country that had so highly honored him, sitting as one of its Senators, that he heard of the disaster at Bull Run in the first conflict of arms and it cast his destiny against himself, against his hopes, his patriotism, his honor He was next known as a Confederate commander, but ever distrusted and subordinated, and his stars were never brightened by victory Not until the Confederacy was tottering and hopeless did he command recognition, and then he became the Secretary of War when the armies were wasted, and all resources were ended. After a few months of vain effort to retrieve an utter hopeless cause, he sat in the last Confederate Cabinet and council of war at Charlotte, and witnessed the death throes of rebellion and the disipation of all the fond dreams he had so dearly cherished Since then, broken in hope, in health and in fortune he has patiently waited for the night that should close a life so full of mingled prom ise and bitterness. Like most brave soldiers of the South, when he surrendered his cause he gave a manly obedience to the new duties he accepted, and has been faithful to the government that triumphed over him in the field. While his death will be widely regretted throughout the South, in the great North there will be a generous judgment for the brilliant, chival ous and fallen Vice President of the Union and soldier of the Confederacy."

Trees on Boundary Lines.

The New York Court of Appeals, not ong since decided that a man has no right to the fruit growing upon branches of a tree overhanging his land, where the trunk of the tree stands wholly upon the land of his neighbor But the law regards the overhauging branches a nuisance, and they may be removed as such; or the owner of the land shaded may remove them if he is careful not to commit any unnecessary destruction in doing so Where the trunk of a tree stands on the line the owners of the adjoining land have a joint ownership in the trees and fruit, and neither one has a right to remove it without the consent of the other

A Household Treasure.

We welcome, with undisguised pleasure, the advent of the first number of a new illustrated serial publication, entitled "A Century After, or, Picturesque Glimpses of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania," which is published by Allen, Lane & Scott and J. W. Lauderbach, No. 283 South Fifth Street, Philadelphia. "This imperial work," as we learn from the prospectus, "now being issued, after years of careful preparatory effort, will consist of abundant and magnificent views, completely illustrating Philadelphia and its surroundings, and the finest scenery and most interesting cities and towns of Pennsylvania, with copious and entertaining descriptive letter-press. The enormous advance made, during a century of self-government, in civilization, the arts and sciences, will be illustrated in the case of a selected metropolis. No city in the whole world has ever been celebrated in a work so magnificent as this will be.'

"These be brave words," and if the glorious promise of the first number be maintained in those which are yet to come, the publishers will have proven their claim to the favor and thanks of the public for he who produces a really good book is a public benefactor. As an carnest and conscientious effort to attain the highest standard of excellence, not alone in the department of art and literature; but in the presentation of a book which, in typographic beauty, is a credit to the city from which it emanates, "A Century After" may fairly rank with the finest illustrated publications of the day.

The complete volume, we understand, is intended to contain about two hundred and fifty superior wood engravings, which will be produced with the greatest care and without limitation of the expence necessary to make them perfect specimens of their kind.

It is a commendable feature, in con nection with this work, that the publishers have thoughtfully limited the numbers to be issued, so as to place the book within reach of all.

It will be completed in fifteen semimonthly parts, at fifty cents each, and is tor sale only by subscription.
