MURPHY & BURCHFIELD, Wholesale and Retail Dry Goods Merchants, corner Fourth and Market street, Pittsburgh.

THIS is undoubtedly the largest, and, if we are not mistaken, the oldest house devoted to that branch of business in the United States. It was established upwards of thirty years ago, by an ingenious and enterprising pianoforte builder, who acquired a practical and thorough knowledge of the "art, trade and mystery," of manufacturing the beautiful instruments for which this house has so long been famous.

If patronage is the highest compliment that can be paid to an establishment, and imitation is the sincerest flattery, then the firm of Nunns & Clark have much to be proud of—for they have never been able to go ahead of their orders sufficiently to make up pianos for exhibition and speculation. At the present time, with more than a hundred hands constantly employed, they cannot keep pace with their engagements. It is not necessary to notice the attempts which have been made to imitate their instruments; suffice it to say, it is a kind of flattery which a philosopher can appreciate.

There are several important particulars which go to make up a perfect piano. The lumber must be sound and well seasoned; the workmen must be thoroughly acquainted with their art; the tuner must have an accurate ear and disciplined taste, and the proprietor must be willing to make generous outlay for the best materials the market affords. The whole gist of the matter, however, may be summed up in three words—brilliancy of tone, durability of material, and beauty of exterior. The action of these pianos is agreeable to the touch, and produces the sweetest and most distinct tones, and give indisputable proof that, however rapid the execution, the notes will be powerful, firm, and equal throughout. For delicacy, depth and rotundity of tone, they are unsurpassed, and they are remarkable for their excellence in keeping tune.

A plain, unvarnished, and truthful account of our recent visit to the workshops and wareroom will give the reader an idea of the extent of business done by these enterprising gentlemen. The manufactory is located on East Twenty Sixth street, and occupies such a conspicuous position there, and covers such a number of lots, it is needless to sketch the surroundings, or point out its particulars in detail.

THE ENTRANCE.

An iron gate guards the arcade which leads to the workshops, and a short walk over a brick patch brings you to a large door, on which, "no admittance," in large letters, stares you in the face. Under this discouraging state of things, you need not give up in despair, but just ring the bell, and you will soon meet with a response. While waiting patiently, you will hear groaning bands, tearing saws, hissing planes, and other unmusical sounds; but these discordant notes are the precursors of sweet tones, which the genius of man will "extract" from the bits of wood, iron and ivory which abound here.

We followed the directions written in unmistakable English upon the door, rang the bell, which was answered by a modest lad who delivered our letters of introduction to Mr. Clark, one of the firm, and he politely escorted us to the several departments of this industrial palace. Mr. Clark is a practical, unpretending man of business, well acquainted with all the minute particulars of his profession, and he manages his men without a single oath or blister, has a place for everything and every thing in its place; indeed the whole establishment works with the accuracy of well-adjusted machinery, doing a vast deal of work in the best style and the most expeditious manner.

Nunns & Clark are the architects and framers of their own fame and fortune, having worked together as journeymen before they commenced operations on their own account. Since that time they have made and sold nearly nine thousand piano fortes which have been sent to every State in the Union, to cheer and charm the appreciators of sweet sounds. We first visited

THE ROOF.

We scaled the ladder which leads to the roof, and notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, we had a magnificent view of the city. In the immediate neighborhood of this manufactory, we noticed blocks and streets of private residences in every style of architecture, evidently the abode of wealth and luxury, where the merchant princes and millionaires of New York are surrounded by all the comforts, convenience, and elegancies, for which they are so famous.

The establishment we have just described, has undoubtedly contributed largely to what constitutes the refined luxuries of home. We venture the remark, that Nunns & Clark's pianos are seen in these richly furnished parlors, and heard in the refined circles that convene there.

* * * *

THE GRAND PIANO.

In one of the departments alluded to in this sketch, we noticed a grand piano, and we unhesitatingly pronounce it the most magnificent instrument we have seen. It is made in the best manner, from the best material. No expense has been spared to make it perfect in every part. The case is elegantly and laboriously carved in beautiful and significant figures, in solid rosewood; the keys are made of polished pearl, the hinges are plated with silver, and the interior is not a whit behind the exterior. This grand piano is the embodiment of our idea of music, having the tones of the organ, the harp, the flute and the human voice combined in rich harmony.

WAREROOM.

A friend having furnished us with a note of introduction to the gentlemen who have the management of this manufactory, we availed ourself of the advantages of one of the omnibuses, (which fly like shuttles up and down Broadway, weaving the warp of other streets into the woof of this,) and soon found ourself on the corner of Tenth street and Broadway.

On the front of a beautiful and substantial building, was the name of the firm, in gilded block letters, which is repeated on light blue window-shades. In this neat and elegant wareroom, which contains a well-appointed office also, we found a gentleman to whom we delivered our letter. We met with a polite and pleasant reception, indeed he had the courtesy to furnish us with a letter to Mr. Clark, which obtained for us a warm and welcome reception at the manufactory. This wareroom is very tastefully arranged and admirably constructed, to bring out the rich music of the instruments on exhibition there.

Owing to the great demand for Nunns & Clark's pianos, there are but few specimen instruments on hand, but pianos of different prices and patterns are always to be seen there, and we can assure intending purchasers, from personal knowledge, that they will not regret the trouble they may take to see those miracles of mechanism, for they will not only see incomparable instruments, but they will have their excellencies pointed out by a gentleman who understands what constitutes a perfect piano. In conclusion, we invite the connoisseurs of music, the dealers in music, and those who desire to procure pianos, to avail themselves of an early opportunity to visit this beautiful wareroom, with its elegant instruments.—Waverley Magazine, Boston.
