PITTSBURGH GAZETTE

SUGAR-CANE RAISED IN DORCHESTER.—We have on our desk a portion of a sugar cane-stalk grown in suburban Dorchester on the ground of a well-known citizen, Benj. Hammesway, Esq. The stalk grew twelve feet high, and is an inch in diameter near the root. It is full of sap of a delicious sweetness. It was planted in May last, the seed having come from China. It was cultivated in the same manner as corn. From this sample, raised with no particular effort, not favored with any specially favorable locality, the question arises—and it is an important and interesting one—can sugar be raised in our climate and region? If it can, as this sample would show, can it be raised with profit? The subject is assuredly worthy the attention of agriculturists. A neighbor of Mr. Hammesway also has several stalks growing. Mr. H. states to us that he has some few seeds on hand which are at the disposal of those who may wish to experiment.—Boston Bee.
